a QUALITY CAR at a QUANTITY price

Search the 6-30 Chalmers from steering knuckle to differential gear and one thought will linger in your mind, "Quality."

It is the one thing in a suit of clothes, a lawn-mower, a watch and an automobile that a wise man never questions.

It prevails today in the Chalmers car as it has for many years past, and though the temptation has been great to reach out and "grow quick" through expedient ways, the Chalmers Company has never wandered from the quality trail.

More and more cars each year have come out of the Chalmers plant. There has been steady, healthy growth.

Simply because the Chalmers policy has always been to market good wares first, and as many good wares as possible second.

This year the demand for Chalmers cars has exceeded that of any previous year by far.

No doubt the low price of $1090 had a stimulating effect. For in building many thousand cars there is a great saving as everyone knows.

There are many quality cars. Some price at $6000. But these are built only in small numbers. The great Chalmers production overcomes the higher prices usually associated with only quality cars.

Thus you will understand the merit of the Chalmers contention that it builds "a quality car at a quantity price."

Will there be a Victrola in your home this Christmas?

Think of the delight of having Caruso, Destinn, Farrar, Gluck, Hempel, Homer, McCormack, Melba, Ruffo, Schumann-Heink, Scotti, Tetrassini and a host of other great artists sing for you!

Think of having Elman, Kreisler, Paderewski, Powell, Zimbalist and other famous instrumentalists play for you; of hearing Sousa's Band, Pryor's Band, Conway's Band, Vessella's Band, Victor Herbert's Orchestra, and other celebrated musical organizations; of enjoying the inimitable witticisms of Harry Lauder, Nora Bayes, Raymond Hitchcock, Mizzi Hajos and other leading entertainers.

Who wouldn't be glad to get a Victrola for Christmas! The only instrument that brings to you the best music of all the world superbly interpreted by the world's greatest artists.

Christmas day and every day, let the Victrola inspire and entertain you!

Christmas isn't too far off to see about your Victrola today. Any Victor dealer will gladly demonstrate the various styles of the Victor and Victrola and play any music you wish to hear.

This Christmas - Shop at McCreery's

Fifth Avenue & 34th Street the Busiest and Greatest Shopping Center in the World

THERE are many things that make for convenience and add to the comfort of the shopper at McCreery's. There are three entrances—on as many different streets.

The Thirty-fourth Street doors are opposite the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. The Thirty-fifth Street entrance leads directly into the Men's Shop (a hint to the hurried business man!).

The Fifth Avenue Arcade opens right into the mezzanine floor, where one can write a letter, telephone, or just rest and watch the shifting kaleidoscope below.

And, whichever way you enter, you will find the elevators within easy reach on the right and on the left. No long, tiresome walk to the end of the floor! They are large and roomy enough, too, to accommodate scores of shoppers, and the service is as well-nigh perfect as study and the exacting elevator chief can make it. Are you unfamiliar with the location of departments? Consult the elevator starters; they are thoroughly posted.

The aisles of the store are wide and roomy—not all cluttered up with so-called "bargain" tables. And, incidentally, that much misused word "bargains" is never employed in this store. Every article here is invariably priced as low as quality will permit, and therefore the New York woman has learned that she can shop here one day just as satisfactorily as another.

The New York woman has learned, too, that "full stocks" mean here something more than a mere phrase. System, and exceptional facilities for handling reserve stocks, have made McCreery's a veritable court of final resort for harassed shoppers.

The gift-giver will find gathered under the McCreery roof practically everything in gifts that are worth while for men, women and children. She can be sure of qualities, for only dependable merchandise is carried here. Silks, famous for half a century, wearing apparel, furs, housefurnishings, rugs, fine china and glass, victrolas, leather goods, jewelry, toys—everything for the home except kitchenware, make the eight selling floors of this store a veritable treasure house of delight for the holiday visitors.

The stranger, unfamiliar with the store, may also obtain upon request the services of a competent shopping guide, who will accompany her from one department to another, and assist in selection, if desired.

One reason why shopping moves so smoothly at this store is found in the exceptional intelligence and efficiency of its employees, for each salesman and saleswoman is thoroughly trained in the technical subjects of his or her department. And not the least of the lessons that are drilled into them daily are those of willingness, cheerfulness, patience, courtesy; for McCreery's realize well that a single act of discourtesy on the part of any employee might cloud the visitor's happiness for an entire day.

Part of the credit for the rapid and satisfactory service is due to the very modern sales system employed. Pneumatic tubes, that flash quicker than one's brain can think, take the place of lagging "cash" girls and boys. So customers move rapidly and the aisles are not choked with waiting crowds.

The McCreery guarantee is broad, and covers all merchandise bought in the store. Goods will be cheerfully exchanged, credit given, or money refunded at any time if a purchase is unsatisfactory.

Below are shown a variety of Christmas suggestions for men and women—attractively priced—from the wealth of special holiday offerings with which the store is now full to overflowing.

If you cannot come to New York in person to do your shopping, let the Mail Order Department, which is under the direction of trained shoppers, fill the order for you. It will be shipped promptly, carefully packed, postage and delivery free.

AND REMEMBER—those of you who can come to New York. McCreery's can be reached by Pennsylvania R. R. (station on Thirty-fourth Street), Hudson Tunnel (station at Thirty-third Street), railroads into Grand Central Station (via Subway), Subway (only two short blocks away), Sixth Avenue Elevated, Fifth Avenue bus line, Thirty-fourth Street Crosstown cars (which stop directly at the store), Broadway, Fourth Avenue, Sixth Avenue, and other surface car lines.

HAVE YOU SHOPPED HERE?

YOU have shopped the world-over, you believe; you have bought laces in Belfast, pine-apples in Hawaii and scarabs in Cairo, but—have you ever shopped here—in SALES and EXCHANGES?

Twice every month Vogue brings this treasure-land of bargains right into your home. It displays its varied wares, in story form, on your library table—and leaves them there for you to pick and choose.

And what a great assortment there is!—wearing apparel for man, woman and child; sporting goods; furnishings for cottage or mansion; handsome needlework; antiques; professional services at your command; and even—now and then—an automobile! Surely in such an array as this you are bound to find something which you want!

Or if, on the other hand, you are already over-blessed with worldly possessions and wish to dispose rather than acquire, you may still use this department advantageously; for like a good rule—it works both ways. It affords you a simple method of disposal for those articles which are no longer of use to you.

In either case, you have only to read the rules at the top of the page and follow the simple formula which guides all transactions made through this department.

VOGUE'S CUT-TO-MEASURE PATTERNS

halve your dress expense and double your dress distinction

Vogue will cut you a special pattern from your own personal measurements, of any original Vogue design shown in either Vogue or Vanity Fair, and deliver it to you in four or five days.

Cut-to-Individual-Measure Patterns provide a flat pattern by which to cut the goods. Full and clear directions are printed in plain English on each piece. Lining, goods, and trimming, are indicated by paper of three different colors. Each seam is marked with a perforated line. Each pattern is accompanied by a full list of all necessary materials, and a pinned-together tissue-paper model of one-half of the gown as it will appear when completed which you try on and use as a guide in putting the costume together.

Cut-to-Individual-Measure Patterns not only give you the line, smartness, and originality for which Vogue fashions are celebrated, but they insure exclusive and perfect-fitting gowns, involving not the slightest alteration. Prices: Waists, Skirts, Suit-Coats, $2.50; Long Coats, Evening Wraps, Negligees, $4. Address:

Brother Cushman's Post Mark Collection Book for the United States

FOR THE BOY OR GIRL, A GIFT WORTH WHILE

This book is intended to encourage the desire for a wider knowledge about the Important and Historical Cities and Towns in the United States in a very unusual way. Every letter that goes through the mail bears some Post Mark and these can easily be collected in many ways. As collected they direct attention to many of the Historical, Patriotic, and Important Places in the United States. Teachers and parents will quickly grasp the educational possibilities of this book, and every one, young and old, who is fond of collecting will appreciate it.

Many spaces for Post Marks, under the various State headings, contain suggestions for the collector. For example—under Massachusetts will be found spaces marked as follows: "Capital of State," "Seat of Harvard University," "Old Whaling Port," "Centre of Witchcraft Agitation," etc. The Post Marks needed for these would be Boston, Cambridge, New Bedford, Salem, etc.

There are spaces in the book for over 2,500 Post Marks, the pages being arranged by States, each page accommodating 28 Post Marks. A number of original Post Marks are given with each book to start the collection. Size of book  $8\frac{1}{4} \times 10\frac{3}{4}$  inches, bound in heavy boards.

We will send a copy of this book in combination with a Subscription to The Outlook for Three Dollars and Twenty-five Cents

The Outlook for 1917

With the beginning of the new year The Outlook will be published in a new and more attractive dress, and on February first the yearly subscription price will be increased to Four Dollars instead of Three Dollars, as at present. The necessity for that change in price is due to the recent great advance in the price of paper. The new page will be larger and more beautiful typographically than the present Outlook, with new type throughout, which will be larger and clearer than that now in use. The new form of The Outlook will allow for better illustration, and, as heretofore, The Outlook will be edited in the belief that its readers desire a clear, concise, thoughtful, and interesting interpretation of current life.

Perhaps the general purpose of The Outlook cannot be better defined than in these recent words of Theodore Roosevelt:

"For six years I was steadily at the editorial council board. In all that time I never once heard it even suggested that the conduct of The Outlook should be shaped in any way save as sincere conviction and conscientious regard for the public good demanded it should be shaped. Always the discussion was along practical lines. The editors, as practical men, discussed what the course of the magazine should be, but they discussed it always from the standpoint of practical men devoted to the service of lofty ideals."

OUR OFFER We will send The Outlook EVERY WEEK FROM NOW UNTIL JANUARY 1st, 1918, and a copy of the Post Mark Collection Book, carriage prepaid, to any address in the United States upon receipt of $3.25

Now is the time to send your order in, as this offer is good only until February 1st, 1917; after that the price of The Outlook and the Post Mark Book together will be $4.25.

The Ohio Electric

IT is already apparent that this season will surpass all former records in the number of Ohio Electrics ordered for holiday delivery.

Each Ohio Electric is an individual achievement, with upholstery and finish to conform to the personality of the owner. Each epitomizes in design and craftsmanship all that the most exacting judgment demands.

No gift at any season could more exquisitely express the good taste of the donor; none would be a source of so much pride and appreciation on the part of the recipient.

The Key to Beauty

THIS Egyptian Princess, painted thousands of years ago, holds in her hand the key to Beauty. The legend tells us that she did not disdain the artifices of the toilet.

She knew the secret of personality—that beauty, emphasized, attracts.

"How Late Can I Order Gifts?"

To save you possible disappointment in securing exactly the gifts you want, and the equal disappointment of having the gifts you do select arrive after Christmas, Vogue has consulted with the Post Office and Express authorities, and prepared for your convenience the Gift Time-Table below.

Although Vogue's Shopping Service is prompt and express trains are many, the number of miles between your home and Fifth Avenue shops is inalterable, and you must order early enough to make sure of before-Christmas delivery. The charm of a gift lies in its surprise, and the gift that comes trailing in after Christmas is as flat as yesterday's champagne. If you study this Gift Time-Table, and order in accordance with it, there will be no hitch in your Christmas shopping.

Moreover, the sooner you order, the wider your choice. Nobody can predict the unaccountable runs of popularity on certain articles, and although the shops do their best to keep a stock of the things shown in Vogue up to the very last minute, some of the late shoppers are almost sure to be disappointed.

From this Vogue which you are now reading—the Holiday Number—you can finish all your shopping in ample time for Christmas, provided you order in accordance with the Gifts Time-Table on this page. Will you not meet us half way: first, by turning to the Christmas Gift section now—right this minute!—and, second, by ordering your gifts with the least possible delay?

ever such wonders of Music as this Christmas brings

INSEPARABLE from the joys, the sorrows, the sympathies of mankind, music best speaks the message of this most beautiful festival season of the year. Indeed the sweet spirit of Christmas was borne first to man upon the wings of song.

And through the years and the centuries, music has told and retold the sacred story with such power and appeal as no other form of expression may equal.

So of all their highest thoughts, their noblest passions, men have found fullest portrayal in music, and only the sombre necessity of dull fingers and musicless voices has held them apart from its delightful art.

But this Christmastide witnesses the nativity of a new freedom in music.

Limitations have been pushed wide and for all is possible the ability of greater enjoyment, greater understanding of the wonderful language of musical tones.

THE world is rich in treasures of music. Beethoven, Liszt, Chopin, Rubenstein, Greig, Saint-Saens, MacDowell—even the mention of these few names suggests a host of others, all master artists who have contributed liberally to the literature of music.

The Pianola has enabled thousands to discover this hiddengold—to quicken their own powers of musical enjoyment. Now a development of the Pianola principle has brought a new and even more wonderful instrument.

The Duo-Art

The statements made regarding the Duo-Art in the interviews with prominent musicians recently published in these pages, definitely establish that in the world of music this instrument is considered of paramount importance and high artistic perfection.

Men like Gabrilowitsch, Godow-

sky, Bauer, Grainger, Schelling . . . . could not definitely indorse an instrument which reproduces their own art if it did not accomplish its work with the utmost precision. No evidence, however, can convince you as quickly and certainly as will the testimony of your own senses. Hear the Duo-Art.

WE cannot hope to convey to you in words the remarkable scope of this great new instrument—the Duo-Art Pianola.

It is a player-piano that grants you such delicacy, brilliance, power of expression—such perfect control of every tone, every touch upon key—as has never before been possible to any but the musically geniused. To play the Duo-Art by music roll is as satisfying as playing upon the keyboard by hand, for the Duo-Art expression controls provide all possible pianistic effects.

But the revolutionary features of the Duo-Art Pianola is its power to precisely reproduce the performances of the greatest concert pianists!

Have you ever heard Mr. Harold Bauer play in recital?—adjust one of Mr. Bauer's Duo-Art record rolls in the music aperture of the instrument and release a small lever. Immediately the keys of the Duo-Art will begin playing of themselves, exactly as if the eminent pianist's fingers depressed them. And the great music you will hear will be Mr. Bauer's as truly as if he himself sat at the pianoforte.

You have never known such a wonder of music as this.

The Duo-Art Pianola can bring into your home not only the treasures of music itself—but also the finest interpretative art of the foremost pianists of the present generation.

THE MOST INTIMATE ISSUE of VOGUE

AFTER all, no matter what they may have taught you in your gullible youth, virtue is not its only reward. Just see what happened to Vogue because it did its Christmas shopping early; it had time to gather together its next number. It is the Lingerie Number,—and really, you can't possibly believe it until you see it. Even Vogue itself didn't know the things that were going on. The erudite gentlemen who write dictionaries really do very well in their way, but they haven't the turn of mind to invent the right words to tell you of these new events in lingerie.

All sorts of things make their appearances, things that are only the beginnings of a whole series of garments, and things that are a climax in themselves. There are articles of lingerie for every hour of the day, and, when you come to the end of a perfect day, there are examples of the latest imagination in nightgowns. (As the poet didn't remark, the day has a thousand garments and the night but one.) All these bits of bubble-tinted daintiness are the big things in a woman's life; there is a light that lies in a woman's eyes only when she gazes on lingerie. Of course, all these affairs are rather brief—but brevity, you know, is the soul of lingerie. Most of them are sheer frivolity, and some of them are a bit,—well, just a bit extreme. But, as the extremes never meet, there is always something to be thankful for. And every bit of lingerie in the next number is so charming that it is its own reason for being. They may be a bit inefficient, perhaps,—but every single one of them is more to be envied than censured.

SEE AMERICA SECOND

There is going to be something absolutely new in Vogue's life, beginning in the next issue.

Now That the Business of Christmas Shopping Is Off Its Mind, the Next Vogue Devotes Itself to the Recreation of Lingerie

The cover of the next, the January 1 number of Vogue, is by Claire Avery

You see, it's this way. Paris, of course, starts the fashions—and finishes them—and Vogue has always justly prided itself on knowing what the Paris designers were thinking of almost before they knew themselves. But it occurred to Vogue, in a thoughtful moment, that after it had received its Paris news, it really ought to See America Second. It felt that some fashion news, like charity, ought to begin at home. And the result is a letter to tell you just what is being worn in New York City by the smartest inhabitants.

Vogue has managed to be all over the city. It has taken tea at the smartest hotels to observe just what sort of costumes are being occupied at tea-time. It has frequented the Opera and seen exactly what is going on in the boxes. And all these things it will tell you.

SKATING THROUGH ANOTHER SEASON

Did you know you are going to skate this winter just as ardently as you did last—perhaps even more so? Vogue is going to show you all the new things that you are going to skate in—things that will make a woman consider skating the greatest of all sports. And then there is an article on the women of Persia by Mme. Ali Kuli Khan, Moraveh-es-Sultaneh. You can tell by her name that she knows exactly what she is writing about. She is the wife of the Persian Ambassador, and that hyphenated branch of her name is a title bestowed upon her by the Shah; it means nothing less than "The Life Giver of the Empire."

Somehow, Vogue can not keep its mind off fashions for more than two paragraphs. In the next issue it tells you, with all the seriousness befitting so grave a subject, of the mainstays of a woman's life,—her new corsets. It steels you against the startling developments of your latest silhouette.

Speaking of fashions, what is your bed wearing, this season? The next Vogue has acquired so many original designs in well-dressed beds that all you have to do is to choose the one you feel instinctively is the right one.

MRS. JOSEPH E. WIDENER AND HER SON, PETER A. B. WIDENER

Elkins Park, the beautiful country estate of the Widener family, is situated just outside Philadelphia. Always the Wideners have been notable horsemen and horsewomen, and their famous stables have made Elkins Park a center of the hunting life about Philadelphia. The present Mr. Joseph E. Widener is likewise a noted yachtsman and his yacht, "The Josephine," is one of the finest pleasure craft afloat. Not less famous patrons of the arts than of sports have the Wideners been. The late Peter A. B. Widener made a most interesting collection of Chinese porcelains, and his picture gallery at Lynnewood Hall, Elkins Park, contains one of the half dozen most famous private collections of paintings in the world. Among other treasures it contains the five portraits of the Cataneo family which Van Dyck painted on one of his visits to Italy, and that marvellous canvas, "The Mill," by Rembrandt, for which was paid the highest price ever paid for a single picture, $540,000. During the past summer the Wideners were at their Newport home, "Stone-acres," and this autumn Mrs. Widener and her daughter, Fifi Widener, who is soon to make her debut in society, have been at Virginia Hot Springs.

As one grows older, life grows so alarmingly complicated; what was the riddle of the Sphinx as compared to the insoluble puzzle of what a man may give a woman on those ever recurring festivals when every one gives every other one something

ALL FOR THE LOVE OF A LADY

"THE manner of giving is of more importance than the thing which one gives." The proverb speaks the truth; often an insignificant bouquet presented with a witty phrase gives far more pleasure than masses of orchids from a fashionable florist, for wit, it is true, is rarer than fortune; sometimes a word from the heart even replaces to advantage the ingenious phrase or subtle allusion. In the last analysis, the finest phrase in the world is not worth an, "I love you dearly," especially an, "I love you," said at just the right moment. The ideal method is to decide far in advance to whom one wishes to give a present, to choose the gift with tact, and to present it at the right moment with the right words.

WHEN I WAS A CHILD

When one is young,—I mean while one is yet a child,—nothing is simpler than the giving of Christmas gifts. It is needless to rack one's brains; the only people to whom gifts are due are one's parents who are rarely exacting. For my own part, I remember that I used to be trained a week in advance, taught by rote, in secrecy. To speak frankly, I learned my Christmas greeting by heart, and when I grew to the age of writing, I wrote it on a paper de luxe, a magnificent, lace-edged, openwork paper, decorated with swallows and forget-me-nots. Then, when the great day came, I presented myself, clad in my finest raiment, in the midst of a family circle, all pretending astonishment and applauding enthusiastically even before I opened my mouth.

My elder sister presented to her mother some handwork destined to eternal uselessness; my younger sister played on the piano some charming fantasy, such as "Le Petit Cavalier." Finally I myself came boldly forward and stammered through my greeting. Emotion on the part of my parents, embraces, compliments followed, and the fête ended by a dinner at which I drank a finger of champagne and tasted all the entremets and after which I duly paid the penalty of indigestion. That was a matter of no moment, however, and it was all very pleasant and happy.

As one grows older, life becomes more complicated. I have already said that no gift was worth so much as the sincere and gracious words which accompanied it, but perhaps that statement somewhat exceeded my real thought. Unquestionably, the gift must be accompanied by gracious words, but for most people, the gift has, after all, its own value, and mere words, however charming they may be, can not always take the place of the gift. What should a man give to a woman on her birthday, at Christmas, or as a recognition of the hospitality which he has received from her? Flowers? Mon Dieu, I am not so ignorant as not to know that. Beautiful flowers, knowingly selected to accord with the taste of the person to whom they are sent, have always been a notable means of gaining the feminine heart. Let no rash man, however, particular variety, he must scrupulously avoid sending her any other kind. Five or six pinks, perfect and of the exact shade that she loves, will please her more than masses of roses or gardenias sent at hazard.

But after all, flowers, no matter how lovely or how rare, lack both personality and unexpectedness,—two great virtues in feminine gifts.

"Too many flowers! Too many flowers!" cried the high-priest of Jupiter in classic days, regretting the earlier period when the faithful garnished the temple with golden vases, rich textiles, and sumptuous furnishings. I know beautiful women who might well be tempted to make the same reflection, not only as to flowers but as to the superfluity of candies and divers sweetmeats which uselessly encumber their salons on festival occasions. I could say as much, also, as regards hand-bags, and other trifles, which, by force of overuse, have come to an inexcusable lack of interest and novelty. It is true that those who receive them have the resource of giving them away again when the occasion presents itself, and I myself would undertake to write a most useful and instructive treatise on the art of wisely re-bestowing superfluous gifts. That will be for another time, however.

BEWARE THE USEFUL GIFT

Observe that I am not advising the giving of useful gifts. Nothing is more disheartening than a gift of that sort; and by useful I mean all that is tiresome, conventional, and banal. Necessities neither satisfy nor delight any one; it is only the superfluous which is agreeable. Even to people of limited means, even to the poor themselves, never,

More than the gift is the manner of giving, and he who presents a mere dozen violets with that indescribable I-am-the-humble-slave-of-your-adorable-beauty air stands higher in a woman's favor than he who gives to the florist carte-blanc under penalty of making mortal enemies, never send gifts which suggest charity in disguise. Rather enliven those in need, cheer them, with an amusing bibelot, a beautiful bit of lace, or anything that is lovely and useless. It is only the useless thing which is poetic; that is its one means of being indispensable.

Never, under any pretext, may one present gifts which recall to those who receive them their professions or their daily cares. Thus I, for my part, beg in the name of mercy that no one shall give me costly ink-wells or golden pens. Rather would I have, let us say, a cigarette holder in greenish amber, unreasonably long and ridiculously fragile, so that in no time at all I shall doubtless reduce it to a thousand bits. I would accept, also, a pair of handsome cuff buttons in gold or platinum; not that I have the least need of such buttons, but I would happily add them to those which I already possess and which are gloriously useless to me, save that now and again I look them over with a pleasant sense of ownership. A costly card-case with my initials in enamel would, also, not be displeasing to me, and I would drop it at once into the depths of a drawer and forget it forever. A bottle of perfume would be another gift after my own heart, and that, I assure you, I would use; for there are, in these days, exquisite perfume bottles enclosed in ingenious and wonderful cases, and they would be most effective on my dressing table.

THE MINE OF CHRISTMAS GIFTS

The great resource of the gift giver is the antique shop; believe me, he can not make too much use of it. It is an inexhaustible mine of Christmas gifts and, I admit it frankly, has rescued me from many a trying situation. There are in shops of this sort thousands of insignificant trifles which, if wisely selected and presented in just the right manner, take the air of being priceless rarities. But let the giver be prudent, modest, and vague about his gift and forbear to call from the housetops that he is presenting the treasures of the Incas. Such boasting involves a risk of serious difficulties.

I once had a friend, who after this fashion, presented to a fair lady an old print which was very pleasing at first sight, but which on closer examination proved absolutely valueless. The lady seemed delighted, and everything would have been perfect if my friend had not by mischance felt obliged to add that the print came from the collection of Lord Fitzboodle, and that it was of extreme rarity. Immediately, his gracious friend flew to an expert, who with cruel truth informed her at once that the print was not worth four sous; and my friend received a letter full of bitter reproaches.

IT IS ALL IN THE MANNER

To return to my earlier statement,—to give is not enough; one must know how to give. History abounds in stories to prove this assertion, and I could cite them endlessly. I will confine myself to telling the story of Mr. William Hope, an enormously wealthy banker of the time of Louis-Philippe and a man who labored unceasingly to conciliate the social world by his liberalities. One evening a woman of high rank who was to be his guest at dinner on the following day, spoke of her great fondness for violets, and he determined to satisfy her utmost wish for them. Although it was mid-winter and bitterly cold, he sent riders in every direction to collect all the violets within a radius of twenty leagues. At his dinner the following day, the table was literally heaped with them. That was an affair not badly managed. I might also tell you a little of the Duke de Gramont-Caderousse, a young dandy of the time of Napoleon III. This young aristocrat, seeking to give his Easter gift a particular lustre, had an enormous Easter egg constructed, placed within it a coach, two horses, and a coachman, and sent it to his belle amie. I may add that the Duke de Gramont-Caderousse died completely ruined.

THE GIFT OF PEARLS IN OYSTERS

Finally I present to you an idea which is all my own. If I wished by the gift of a string of pearls to delight that hard-hearted woman who mocks at my suffering, this is the way that I should go about it. There would be a luncheon and the beginning of that luncheon would be oysters. The lady of dreams lifts her oyster fork, but strange to say she can not even taste the oyster. It appears that the management has neglected to open these miserable shells. Then, armed with a knife and by dint of great care and effort, Monsieur separates the shells. Heavens! within the oyster shines a brilliant pearl. Second oyster, second pearl; third oyster, third pearl, and so on until the necklace is complete. Exclamations of pleasure follow, of admiration and astonishment. How could those pearls have come there? On that point Monsieur protests innocence. He does not know; he knows nothing about it; it must be a miracle. A charming farce may be played on this delightfully mystifying theme, but I beg of you not to whisper my secret to the first comer, for it would become common property at once and that must not happen, for I myself intend to use this little trick on the twenty-fifth of next December.

Do you wish mortal enemies? Is it your desire that the lady of your heart shall turn upon you the cold courtesy of raised eyebrows and an icy shoulder? Then, by all means, present to her a truly and unquestionably useful gift

A MIDWINTER NIGHT'S DREAM

It Is for the Hostess to Decide Whether It Is to Be Outdoor Skating Party or Indoor Dance, for Vogue's Winter Fancy Dress Party May Be Either

COSTUMES DESIGNED BY CLAIRE AVERY

(Left) The snow man's costume depends on whether the party is to be an outdoor or an indoor sport. When that momentous question is settled, he has nothing to worry about. If it is to be outdoors, his costume is of white cotton flannel; if indoors, it is of white cotton gauze. In either case, it glistens with powdered mica, and it is wadded with cotton to the redundant contours seen in all our best snow gentlemen. The buttons are rough black humps (it's vitally important that they look like coal) and he must submit to having his face painted white with black eyes, nose, and mouth.—more coal, you see. His hat is a child's tin bucket, and his woolen scarf is of whatever color he chooses, so long as it's cold.

(Right) The white rabbit, with all her traditional timidity, is a most appealing bit of animal life. Her costume, too, depends on her whereabouts. If the party is served on ice, she wears white velvet, banded with white rabbit fur; if its place is in the home, she wears white chiffon, banded with white swan's-down. The wired ears of her white head-dress are lined with pink and she thoughtfully carries a bunch of silk carrots. Those tall trees, the backgrounds for the rabbit and the snow man, may be placed on the ice of the outdoor party or along the halls of the indoor one. They are tall red poles, tied with white streamers, and topped with tiny Christmas trees hung with electric bulbs.

(Right) One is sure of a warm welcome if one goes to the winter party as a fire. The way to do it is to wear a skirt composed of layer upon layer of chiffon of all the pale and deep flame tints. There is a black velvet bodice, and from its shoulders hangs an overdress of smoke gray net, barred with strips of black velvet—you know those strips represented the grate, didn't you? The black velvet head-dress bursts into flames of wired flame color chiffon, shining with sparkling jewels, and a veil of smoke gray net swirls mistily about the eyes

(Left) No one seems to be quite sure just what this charming young person is; let us call her just a passing fancy. She begins with a black velvet bodice and continues into white velveteen trousers with appliqué black velveteen. Her ruffs are wired circles of white gauze, with satin flowers of many brilliant colors

(Below) Behold Pierrette, the better half of the young gentleman opposite. She is divided into various sections of white satin and white lace, the topmost one of which is wired far and wide. Her wrap, too, is of black chiffon edged with swan's-down, and her lantern is the counterpart of her counterpart's. Her hair is piled high and tied with a bow of white wired ribbon

(Below) The ballroom wall is hung with lapis lazuli curtains, stenciled with white snowflakes and snowbanks. The ceiling is draped with blue chiffon, through which shine dim lights—it must be like soft moonlight, you see. Bare trees, from winter woods, are whitewashed and grouped about the walls, and the lanterns are as red as the benches. Outdoors one merely puts red benches and hangs red lanterns about a stretch of ice, and lets Nature, the famous exterior decorator, do the rest

SOME GOWNS THAT ARE GOING ON IN PARIS

WHEN Chiffonette goes shopping, let others stay at home. Her two "Poms" alone will keep any six saleswomen occupied and as for Chiffonette—she can employ a dozen.

She is an indefatigable shopper. For her the most august première has no terrors and from her the timid vendeuse flees. There are no secrets of the couturiers which are hidden from Chiffonette, not a ruffle nor a button with which she is not familiar. She worries all sorts of secrets from the modistes, and the boot-makers count it a lucky day when she does not come in. The great magasins yield up more of their treasures and for less money to Chiffonette than to any one else in Paris, and the furrier retires hastily to the fastnesses of his work-rooms when Chiffonette steps across the threshold.

Shopping, what crimes are committed in thy name by Chiffonette! If I wanted to buy a trousseau I would give two thousand francs or so to Chiffonette and take a holiday. And when I returned to town she would show me four thousand francs' worth of trousseau which she had bought for half that sum. For shopping, Chiffonette is as swift and sure as a hound on the scent. Once on the trail of a bargain she never loses her quarry.

However, even Chiffonette has her bad days—buys pink, as it were, when she should buy green or buys a large flat hat when she should by all the rules buy a tall one. "Someone," she sobbed, when I dropped in to see her recently, "should take me rudely b-by the hand and lead me to a j-jail and lock me up, when I'm t-tempted to buy anything like that!"

Heavily Disguised in Fur the Tunic Creeps Back into Fashion, and beneath It Peeps a Fur Petticoat—Monkey Fur Has Caught the Parisienne's Eye and There Is Now Hope for the Vanishing Race of Rabbits

"That" appeared to be a coat or tunic of beige cloth, girdled loosely and collared with fur. I looked at it with interest.

"It seems all right," said I. "Where is the skirt?"

A despairing wail was my only answer. Then "There is no skirt. I—that's a d-dress," she said weakly.

A dress! It looked more like a chemise-blouse and I allowed Chiffonette to wallow in misery for fully three minutes before I came to the rescue.

"Why don't you call it a tunic," I ventured finally, "and have a skirt made to wear under it?"

"A skirt!" A woebegone face lifted itself from the pillows. "A skirt!" and a gleam of hope shot across the face like summer lightning. Then all of Chiffonette emerged, so to speak, from the divan, and stood erect on two small feet.

"I will," she cried. "And the underskirt shall have a fur band so deep that every one will think it a fur petticoat. It's the latest fashion."

And it is. Not a fashion, to be sure, followed by all the world, but a fashion peculiarly adapted to the individual. The fur petticoat is narrow,

The life of an actress is so full of reverses! She wears evening gowns to work in and street clothes to play in. So of course they have to be unusually good looking street clothes; as who knows better than Gaby Boissy of the "Théâtre des Capucines"?

Left: There was an itemized account once that read: "Fifty dollars for doing the job; five hundred for knowing how." And of course that is how all couturiers make out their bills. You understand when you see a gown like this one of blue tulle with its blue velvet ribbons and its pink roses as big as cabbages and as little as lozenges considerably narrower than the tunic above it, and it is quite straight instead of being slightly circular, as all good petticoats have been of late.

As for the tunic, it returned furtively after its long absence, in halves and sections, fur-edged and flaring. Sometimes it was disguised as an apron in front only, and sometimes it took the form of loose, swinging, fur-weighted panels on the hips. It is only recently that it has cast off all pretense and assumed an unmistakable form, while under it skulks a rapidly diminishing underskirt. The tunic is usually edged with fur (the width of the fur band varies according to the Maison), and the underskirt is, as a rule, untrimmed.

THE RABBIT AND HIS SKIN

Some houses, instead of placing the fur band on the outer edge of a skirt or coat, place it inside so that the merest cord of fur shows at the edge. A new Chéruit coat of chestnut brown cloth is lined throughout with rabbit masquerading as chinchilla and the fur comes to light on the collar, revers, and cuffs. The cloth itself is quilted in an odd and pretty pattern, and the girdle, which ties as only Chéruit girdles tie, is quilted also; the stitching is done with thread of the same color.

Monkey fur, which appeared at the midsummer openings, is employed more and more by all the leading houses. Even hats are now trimmed with it, and there are many effective scarfs made of monkey combined with other furs. In spite of its harshness, it is smart and women are wearing it; so the poor rabbit may at last hope to pass the winter in its skin.

Very smart is a sort of tobacco-brown cheviot, the color of that well-known Scotch fabric which is used for sports coats. Mme. Lanvin used this warm light brown stuff for a smart tailored costume, with a narrow gilet of black satin and black satin on the collar and cuffs. Chéruit uses it for manteaux and a tailored suit with a flaring-skirted coat bordered all about with dark brown fur. The high collar is drawn closely about the throat, and the sleeves are finished with fur cuffs.

It is quaintness that one notes in the frocks of the French children. A poke bonnet is made of cherry red silk, banded with skunk, and lined with lace. The frock is of periwinkle blue serge, related to the hat by the cherries embroidered on girdle and collar

Satin is almost the rage just now. All the great houses are using it for frocks and cloaks, trimmed heavily with fur. The suppleness of satin chimes well with the straight loose frocks of the chemise persuasion, which are being exploited now by every house in Paris. Paquin makes a new barrel-shaped cloak of black satin with a wide band of otter at the bottom and a huge square collar lying across the shoulders. The cloak bulges about midway its length; the new line is very smart and very much Paquin. Other Paquin models of the chemise variety are made of black liberty satin or of mousseline over a satin foundation. The pocket is still made much of at the Maison Paquin, where it is the principal feature of many of the one-piece frocks.

NEW THINGS HERE AND THERE

Cloaks of black satin are trimmed with bear, kolinsky, otter, gray beaver, and in fact almost any fur. The plaid effects in furs which commenced the season in certain salons are not much in evidence at present in Paris, where a certain sobriety of dress is demanded by good taste. However a livelier color is descending on fabrics, which are more gay in tone than they have been since the war.

Chinese and Japanese embroideries, after the manner of coming events, have cast their shadows before them on the tissues of the season, where oriental designs hold first place.

Mme. Renée of Premet wears a most charming little chemise frock of

We travel along in dark dignity, for is not our going accompanied by a sombre coat, banded in sable? Fur we must have at neck, wrist, and knee, as do other good Parisiennes

AS WISHES ARE NEITHER HORSES

The presence of a beast of prey in the Bois doesn't disarm our smile, for he is present only in pelt, and the responsibility of that is on our own shoulders. The violets go where the smile goes, and the smile travels far

NOR TAXIS, PARISIENNES WALK

Instead of unmasking, Paris uncollars. There are times, however, such as windy mornings in the Bois, when the collar rises and asserts itself; between collar and hat, it is a lucky Parisienne who is able to prove she can smile

Somehow, one gets the impression of a trim little ship in the flowing lines and the tilt to port; but no wind that blows in Paris, where winds are blowing very cold, can disturb the ship's bearings

A sharp wind and a fast walk call for an interval of readjustment. We are betting that the lady on the left will outdistance the other, for we have a feeling she is wearing American shoes

This walking to places is not an economy of time. What with the haste and the cold morning, we missed Madame's face, fingers,—and companion. But at least it wasn't a case of the cold shoulder

BERTHE-HERMANCE

When the couturiers began making dresses like this in marron burella trimmed with gray beaver, we suspected no ulterior motive. Lately, however, we have come to suspect that this is only one of their ways of bringing back the tunic. You see what would happen if that peplum should grow a little longer and the skirt should shrink black velvet, which is a bit closely fitted at the waist, where it is carelessly girdled with black velvet with the falling ends finished with silver tassels. Two tucks cross the skirt just below the hips, and the sleeves, instead of continuing the "bishop" shape to the narrow cuff, are cut off straight across, leaving the edges falling loose, while the cuff is attached only to the inside of the sleeve; but the point of the whole frock lies in the trimming, a tracery of silver embroidery of lace-like delicacy about the neck and the opening down the front, which extends below the girdle. This silver embroidery on black velvet is exceedingly effective.

A new Premet blouse of the peplum variety is made of peach pink liberty satin. The lower edge is turned up for three inches and hem-stitched, and the blouse, which is loosely plaited from a yoke, buttons down the front.

THE BLOUSE ACQUIRES A PEPLUM

The new fashion demands a peplum blouse, loosely girdled; the old type of blouse, which retired definitely under the girdle at the waistline, is no longer smart. Very striking is a "chemise" blouse of black silk jersey splashed with patches of Japanese embroidery in gold thread. Another, of rose mousseline de soie, shows an all-over tracery of silver thread with a heavier design of embroidery on the pockets.

In the Bois, these frosty mornings, furs are rampant. In an hour's stroll one may encounter almost any animal known to man, though it is doubtful whether the poor wandering shade of any one of these beasts would recognize its own skin, so cunningly have the furriers done their work. The preference for shaggy furs is marked. The very scarcity of skunk and kindred furs has given them a chic never before possessed and some of the smartest manteaux and tailored costumes are trimmed with bushy pelts. A new Lanvin tailored suit is trimmed with patches of gray beaver, placed low on each side of the front below the belt and surrounded with gray embroidery. On blue serge, this is most effective.

THE COLLAR A MASK

Fur collars are so close and high that only the eyes are visible between toque and collar. The Parisienne thus goes masked like some beauty of the east; for, toqued so that the eyebrows are invisible and with the nose buried in soft fur, she leaves one to guess to whom the eyes belong. With the same effect with which she once removed her mask at a ball, the Parisienne now, on the Sentier de la Vertu, unfastens her collar.

The frocks worn by children are the quaintest little creations imaginable of velours de laine in brilliant tones or quaint old-time colorings. One pretty dark-haired child of six wears a prim little cloak of dark red velours de laine trimmed with two-inch bands of black velvet in standing collar, cuffs, and band on the bottom of the coat. The hat is of black velvet in the form of a small beret with a peak, and there are white stockings and black varnished shoes; nothing more deliciously naive than this little costume has been seen in Paris this season.

Very odd is a child's hat made of beige woolen yarn sewn round and round, one woolen thread against another, on to a small round shape. It is worn with a little knitted manteau of the same color. Paquin makes a small black velvet fez which is trimmed with two small ostrich plumes—one black and one antique red—which are sewn to the side of the fez directly in the back. Another Paquin model is in the form of a beret of black velvet with a tassel drooping over the ear.

Chéruit makes a small round shape covered with heavy blue crêpe embroidered in an all-over pattern with blue silk thread of a very slightly lighter shade. A narrow ribbon of

In the girdle of a bronze gold taffeta frock they have put a touch of dull red velvet. Yes, we said red velvet—for they were Parisian, so they dared to; from shoulder to wrist they lead you to believe that this is a bishop sleeve; then they cut it square across and add that cuff that touches only the front. Embroidery is of tubular beads

some bright color encircles the base of the crown. These hats appear in different shades of blue, beige, and yellow. By contrast a small hat of rich red velvet is embroidered with blue.

METAL IS CONTAGIOUS

Metal embroideries are almost contagious. At first mousselines, thin woolen stuffs, and silks only were affected; then the metal trimming spread to furs and veils, and now even summer wash fabrics show touches of gold or silver thread.

One of the prettiest metal-embroidered veils seen thus far in Paris was worn by Mlle. Mistinguett at a répétition générale at Ba-ta-clan recently. The hat was of black velvet with a black velvet bride, and over it was thrown a circular veil of black mesh bordered with silver lace—lace which had the appearance of hammered metal rather than twisted thread—which drooped to the eyes in front and fell to the shoulders in the back. With this hat Mlle. Mistinguett wore long, pendant, jet earrings and a necklet with a flashing pendant.

The pretty hands of Paulette Duval displayed an odd arrangement of jewels that same night at Ba-ta-clan. From bracelets of pearls and brilliants on her wrists fell chains of pearls which were attached to rings of pearls on her fingers, so that the backs of the hands were literally laden with pearls,—a bit barbaric, but interesting. Even the thumb bore its circlet of jewels. With pretty costumes, clever dancing and considerably more than a dash of fun, "Ça Murmure!" at Ba-ta-clan promises to be a very successful revue.

Furs are rampant in the Bois these frosty mornings. In an hour's stroll one may see every animal known to the hunter and many that no hunter could classify. Long-haired furs are again in favor for the excellent reason that they are scarce and hard to get

PARIS GROWS UP UNDER the EYE of PAQUIN

"Girls Will Be Girls," Sighs Paris and after Trying for Years to Cut Their Mother's Styles Down to Their Size, Finally Makes Up Its Mind to Dress Them according to Their Years

TIME was when the Maison Paquin frocked the grown woman only, in most ravishing tailleurs, evening gowns, and cloaks; but lately—not that Mme. Paquin loves women less but that she loves children more—all this is changed. Paquin has opened a well-conducted department for children and young girls. One may grow up, as it were, in the Maison Paquin; for from her first birthday to her last she may be frocked there.

Christening robes, furry outdoor garments, muffs, and the briefest and daintiest of party frocks, as well as all the stern regalia of school days and the coquettish trousseau of the débutante may now be had at the Maison Paquin.

But Mme. Paquin, who is again the inspiration of the house, does not stop here. She marries one off in the smartest of wedding gowns; she frocks one relentlessly—but so becomingly—as a matron, and then she begins all over again and frocks one's children.

And if, in the meantime, one should happen by any chance to grow old—which one does not, nowadays—the house of Paquin comes again to the rescue, and lo, nobody would suspect one of being a day more than thirty.

This sudden interest in the younger generation, however, in no way lessens the importance of the grown-up department, which is flourishing as only the wicked are supposed to flourish.

(Above) Can we call it a chemise frock? No, we can't talk but our sister can and does, while we wait for our tea, which is about to appear; though of the two sister prefers her own Paquin tea-gown

(Left) This is the correct length—or lack of length—for a Parisienne's skirts when a Parisienne is this age; as to fur, we study economics early in Paris; we put our hands in our pockets

To comfort next year's débutante, who feels rather lost in Paris, Paquin made this frock; it is like a little girl who started out a very plain little girl indeed—and suddenly surprised everybody

If we are very good and careful we are allowed to wear a Paquin frock, and if we wear a frock like that there is only one thing left to ask for—curly hair

To be properly grown up one should grow up in Paquin clothes. Juvenile Paris is doing it, and happiest are those who have had the longest chance; if one hasn't known this for months, it is best to pretend that one has

LONG LINES AND SOFT FULNESS STILL
PERSIST, MAKING THE WIDE LOOK SLIM
AND THE SLIM SEEM EVEN SLIMMER

(Below) Oh, please do not be hospitable and ask her to remove her coat. You see, it isn't a coat at all, but a beige cloth frock. It slips on over her head, looks like a redingote, and is trimmed with a whole family of rabbits, dyed in moleskin shade. The belt is of cloth, and gathers the fulness softly about the waist; from Marianne Buzenet

(Above) The tunic is as black as her hair, and its satin is as soft as her cheek; but although the embroidery is in high relief, it doesn't compare with the relief she felt when she saw what Premet had made for her to wear to her dearest friend's tea. The tunic of black satin, embroidered in black silk, is completed by a skirt and elbow length sleeves of beige satin

(Above) "Now for a dream of fair women," said Chanel, gathering together a length of splendid geranium velvet, broad bands of imitation marten, and a dash of genius. Out of them was created this coat, and the fair woman who wore it looked like a scarlet lily in bloom. Perhaps you think it of a simplicity—but no! That is not simplicity; it is genius

FLIGHTS OF FANCY DRESS

Children Need but Little on Below, Nor Need that Little Long

(Above) To see the merry-go-round one has only to see Mary go round. A red satin tent makes a fitting hat, and a white satin dress trimmed with red has acquired bells. If to be dressed up like a circus horse is to be dressed for fun, the stuffed satin animals are out for a time. They are painted in colors, and may be made of wood instead of satin.

(Second below) One's first evening dress seems less chilly if made of wool. This "ball of yarn" consists of colored yarn sewed to a boned satin frame; one carries a knitting needle, that, when questioned, one's costume may be prodded and proved all wool if not a yard wide. Not so one's hair, where the knitting needles are for ornament only.

(Below) This going about as a ribbon might be embarrassing but for the amount of the ribbon; then too that rainbow feeling after dressing is always pleasant. Between you and me and the rainbow, we wear a slip bodice and bloomers of pink satin and, on our feet, lavender silk socks and pink satin slippers with trailing pink ribbon ties.

(Below) Are we down-hearted? No; for we are a Scotch peasant, our jacket is green flannel with bright red buttons, and we sing lustily, as a Britisher should. Below our tartan skirt are pantalettes of the kind the Scotch do not wear.

(Second from the right below) When vanity suggests a peacock fan, 'tis folly to be shy. From a bodice of green tulle and imitation sapphires falls a skirt of green tulle and peacock feathers. Then, with a downcast flutter of the eyelids and a broadcast flutter of the feathers, the wearer spreads her skirt to fan the flames of admiration.

The most rebellious of page boys can not resist the manly charms of a vest with pockets, even though it be of white satin and accompanied by sapphire blue satin coat and trousers, gay Chinese lining, and plaited batiste tucker; this particular page (and he is very particular) preserves his dignity; perhaps the masculine black buttons help.

IN "THE CENTURY GIRL" MISS FLORENCE WAL-

TON DANCES TO THESE ACCOMPANIMENTS

CALLOT SŒURS COMBINE IMAGINATION, COL-

ORS, AND FLOWERS—WITH THESE RESULTS

Photographs © Ira L. Hill

(Above) When Miss Walton was in Paris last summer, she had many long and momentous conferences with the Callot Sœurs; when she returned to America, her trunks bulged with the results. This result is of black Chantilly lace with panels of black and gold embroidery edged with gold lace on the skirt. The high places in the bodice are of cream Callot net, edged with jeweled bands, and beneath the jeweled girdle, directly in back, is an utterly unexpected little puff. Garlands of pink and red velvet flowers—the house of Callot blooms this season—trail down the skirt

(Above) Everything is founded on a pair of net trousers,—they are to be guessed at, not seen. The skirt above them begins with a skirt of Chantilly lace, over the front of which falls a panel of beaded net, and over that are frills of white net, which extend to the very hem in back. The bodice of flesh colored satin has jeweled bands as apologies for sleeves, and beneath those bands are folds of cream colored tulle—it's a Callotism that a brunette must blend her gown with her skin. There is a jeweled girdle tied with a white ribbon, and a garland of green roses—such is Nature in Paris

(Middle above) This gown is just one layer of tulle after another, beginning with deep magenta and shading all the way up through various roses and pinks to the topmost skirt of all, which, like the bodice, is flesh color. There is a Chantilly lace underskirt, but one sees very little of that. The surprise of the gown comes at the height of its collar. It is just another of those things that never happen in any place but Paris—a band of rose and gold opalescent bead embroidery, from which a cord shimmering lengths of the same embroidery, ending in pale colored flowers

IN THE HOUSE COAT PARIS HAS IN-
VENTED A REAL INDUCEMENT FOR WOMAN
TO STAY IN HER TRADITIONAL SPHERE

MODELS FROM WILLIAM HARDY

(Left) Five o'clock may be tea-time to prosaic souls, but to the Parisienne it is an excuse to wear a Callot tea-gown of silver cloth and white chiffon with a black net and lace coat embroidered with bugles. The sleeves and bottom of the coat are of black lace and the tie-ends of cerise grosgrain ribbon

(Right) As light as a rumor is this latest Callot evening frock of crushed raspberry tulle, but still it has a real foundation in deep pink satin. It is further substantiated by bands of dull red velvet ribbon, by panels embroidered in crystal beads, and by embroidery in dull red silk and crystal beads

(Right) If the dinner conversation of her neighbor does not sparkle she may console herself with the scintillating crystal and silver beads on the long-waisted bodice of her Bulloz gown. They shine to advantage on this combination of black satin and black tulle, under which is a bodice of salmon velvet. The skirt is shirred to the bodice with what are known to a warlike age as cartridge plaits

(Left) Quite the newest reason for having tea is the house coat, which has become a formidable rival to the tea-gown. Delft blue velvet, trimmed with natural muskrat and embroidered with gold braid in Russian designs, composes this model from Margaine-Lacroix. It is worn over an underdress of flesh-pink plaited chiffon; its gold draw-ribbon is weighted with beaded ornaments

THIS SEASON, NEW YORK RE-
VIVES THE CONTINENTAL HABIT
OF HATS AND SEMI-FORMAL GOWNS
FOR THE RESTAURANT DINNER

GOWNS BY MISS CARROLL

(Below) Just for the sake of such indoor sports as dining and dancing, there is a frock of yellow grosgrain silk with a jacket of silk and silver lace. Frills of silver-edged yellow net burst from the silk cuffs of the yellow net sleeves, and a band of more silver-edged net concludes the skirt. The hat just shows how small evening hats can be if they want to. It is of deep yellow velvet, over a brim of silver lace which veils the eyes, and there is a sweep of natural paradise.

Hats on this page from Ogilvie

(Above) This season New York is doing what the continent has always done—wearing to its restaurants in the evening semi-formal evening gowns with hats. Years ago, you remember, we used to do it, and now again the restaurant gown and its accompanying hat threaten to become so inseparable that nothing but the wearer's head can come between them. This frock is of green velvet with a bodice of green Georgette crepe, braided with gray. Skunk follows the ups and downs of the hem. The hat is of brown grosgrain ribbon, edged with skunk to accord with the skirt and encircled with brown ribbon

(Above) When the cabaret tolls the knell of parting day, gowns and hats like these begin to enter all the smart restaurants. The gown is of sapphire velvet, draped over a skirt of sapphire tulle splashed with sapphire beads. The bodice is blue velvet, more blue tulle, and still more blue beads. Really, the innocent bystander can scarcely decipher where the lady leaves off and the frock begins, for there is a fold of flesh colored net at the back and front of the bodice. The hat has a brim of silver net, between a crown and a border of sapphire blue cloth, and it is trimmed with black paradise

THE QUEEN OF SPAIN

Since the war has spread itself over Europe, Queen Victoria and King Alfonso have been forced to discontinue their frequent journeys on the continent and to stay in their own sunny country. King Alfonso, however, has succeeded in making San Sebastian, the Spanish watering-place, the social center of Europe, and all the smart world flocks to its race-course and bull-ring. The Queen of Spain, who was Princess Victoria of Battenberg before her marriage, is famed for her faultless taste in dress, as well as for her magnificent jewels. Like her husband, she is extremely popular with her subjects

NOËL! NOËL!

By SARA HAMILTON BIRCHALL

They want me to do a Christmas poem
Full of holly, and plum puddings, and presents, and carols, and open fires,
And dances, and mistletoe, and laughter.

But all I can think about is the time when I lived in one room,
Seven by nine, kalsomined green, and earned nine dollars a week
As a stenographer,
And had a can of sardines and a box of crackers for Christmas dinner.

And about the time when poor little red-haired Eve L'Amoureux,
With the cough of her profession already upon her,
Didn't dare to go home for Christmas,
And we went to a restaurant,
And she cried into the soup.

And about the Christmas I spent at the chilly Home for the Friendless,
And played with sixty-eight little kiddies all in the same kind of blue dresses,
And how they ran, and laughed, and clung to me.
And one tiny mite clung harder than any of the rest,
And kissed me, and sobbed, and couldn't let go my collar.
And how they all looked, eating their scraggy turkey out of tin pans,
And sucking oranges.
Christmas was the greatest treat of the year to them.

And about the night when the expressman
Delivered a Christmas present to me at midnight,
And couldn't make change for twenty dollars,
And had to take the heavy box back to the barns,
And said he had been delivering Christmas packages for thirty-six hours
Without a wink of sleep.

Perhaps I could do a tinkly Christmas poem
All about Noël! Noël! and candles in the windows,
And Joseph and Mary coming up from Galilee,
And Peace and Goodwill to Men
If I thought that any of these excellent householders,
Dancing, and merrymaking, and opening Christmas presents,
And decently church-going,
Paid any attention to what Christ really wanted them to do,
And kept Christmas as He would have kept it,
Instead of giving a quantity of ill-chosen Christmas presents
To people who would much rather have had something else,
And overeating themselves at table, and going to sleep afterwards.

And I am just as bad as the rest of them, because I am going to buy myself
A beautiful piece of embroidery to hang on my wall,
And go out snowshoeing, and have a merry time.

Do you think I have any particular right
To do a Christmas poem?

BY THE RICHNESS OF
CHINA, SILVER, AND FINE
LINEN MAY THE HOSTESS
DO HONOR TO CHRISTMAS

At the end of a small dinner, one of those dinners intimate enough for the women to remain at the table when the coffee and liqueur are served, the only pieces of silver left are the fruit knives and forks, made to match the rest of the silver service, the low octagonal compotiers used for bonbons, and the unshaded candlesticks. The after-dinner coffee cups and saucers shown here are decorated with a gold border and a cobalt blue band, and the octagonal dessert plates match them. A plain bright finish distinguishes the two compotiers and the candlesticks. The cloth, of a pure Irish linen double damask, with one dozen napkins, should be embroidered with the monogram or initial

The flat silver for four courses is shown in this correctly set cover at the right. It includes an oyster fork, a soup spoon, a fish knife and fork, and an entrée knife and fork, which are to be placed in the order of the courses. The small silver pepper and salt shakers, like the rest of the silverware, have a plain bright finish; it is all designed in the style of the French school at the time of François I. The daintily hand-decorated place-card is of a gaiety befitting the holidays. Silver on this page from the Gorham Company; linen from Walpole Brothers; place-cards from Mayfair, Inc.

The centerpiece of roses, orchids, and fruits is not too ornate for the Christmas dinner; the napkins of course match the double damask cloth, which sets off the gleaming glass and china to great advantage; all the silverware has a plain bright finish. The service plate has a cream center, rich gold bands, and a filigree pattern over a band of cobalt blue. The glasses of rock crystal include goblets for water, claret, and sherry, and they have high, delicate stems. The sterling silver compotiers and the salt and pepper shakers are the same as those in the picture above. Floral centerpiece decorations from Max Schling; china and glassware from Higgins and Seiter

A S S E E N b y H I M

AFTER all, this is a dancing winter. Gone are the lugubrious predictions of the early autumn. Every one who had a daughter, a granddaughter, or even a niece—a "girl," as they say in London, seized upon her and brought her out, so please you, at a ball.

Moreover, there were even more than the usual number of new people who rushed in, some of them having served novitiates at the fashionable watering places during the summer. Everybody dipped, hesitated—and was lost! The winter is dancing along as merry as Ariel.

À LA MODE DE NERO

Indeed, a clever woman who has devoted much of her time to works of mercy abroad, has found fault with us for our levity. Coming fresh from the harrowing scenes of horror and suffering in the war zone, it was no doubt a shock to find us dancing and fiddling quite à la mode de Nero. However, what would you? Great fortunes have been made by some—lucky children of the goddess—in speculation, supplies, and munitions of war. We have been generous enough, heaven knows! It is high time that charity should begin at home. Moreover, are we not supposed to be neutral?

Of course war benefits are rather at a discount this year, for people ran them into the ground. But sweet charity is still in vogue. Suzanne may refuse to sew shirts for soldiers, but have we not our own charities, our own poor, our own sick and suffering? And is it not clearly our duty to look after them and also to put money into circulation?

One of the most generous and public spirited of society women was severely taken to task by the sensation-loving newspapers and their public, because, forsooth, she gave a ball. But what was the reason? Business conditions were dull. Everybody was hard up. Those who had money were keeping it. Looking over the situation, the lady decided to give a great ball, which would compel those who had money to put it into circulation for the benefit of those who had not. The tradespeople, the shopkeepers, everybody down to the humblest wage-earner, benefited by that ball, and in addition had the pleasure of reading about the wicked extravagance of the rich. It saved the year.

Perhaps Nero had a good reason for fiddling when Rome burned. We have heard only one side of that story. Who knows? It may be that the account handed down the centuries was originally only a campaign document.

VITAL QUESTIONS OF BANDS AND BUTTER

Bring out your saxophones and ukuleles. Blow the one and twang the other. Produce the bass drum, and by no means forget the castanets. We Americans must furnish our own music nowadays, and something really will have to be done about it soon. Although we have conjured up undreamed-of native talent, and borrowed all that of our Central American neighbors, we are dangerously near the end of our resources. The ear of society is still inclined towards the Latin band, but nobody knows the moment when it will demand something new and refuse to listen as "La Paloma" turns over uneasily in its grave.

One Is Reminded, These Days, of the Complaint of Solomon, and of the Frivolity of Nero, the Well-known Violinist

Perhaps some one will invent a new musical instrument. None has been produced so far. The mandolin and the piano-like affair played with little sticks are only variations of European instruments that we have had with us since the days (Uncle George is my authority for this as it was before my time)—of the Spanish students and the first so-called Hungarian orchestras.

As for the butter! Ten years ago, if any one had asked me about the propriety of serving butter at dinner, I would have advised them to visit those white-tiled palaces known to Washington Square as the Café de l'Enfant, where I am told that butterplates still flourish and the nutritious Boston bean may be had for ten cents.

Yet we have dined so much in restaurants, and have found their pretty silver devices for butter so fetching that we have adopted them, and behold us spreading our dinner roll with the freshest of unsalted butter. I know that Uncle George was startled when he first encountered it, and he seemed uneasy for some days afterwards.

"I could have believed it of the Smith-Joneses," he protested, "but of the Marigold Van Diedricks—never! What would her grandmother, old Mrs. Twiller Kinderhook, have said, if she had lived to see those butter-coolers?"

And yet in all the collections of wedding gifts of twenty-five years ago, do you not recall the salt receptacles of repoussé silver, shaped like owls and claws and heraldic griffins, the forks that led to nothing and were meant for nothing except presents? And then there were fearful pie-knives too.

We do not pepper and salt our food now as we did then, but we are returning to butter in our democracy. I have seen it on several tables since the evening when Uncle George was shocked. Butter plates, however, are seldom used. At dinner, when butter is introduced, there are the small silver butter coolers, just as you find them at the hotels.

At informal luncheons, however, we continue to cling to the bread and butter plates. These luncheons are really French breakfasts with an American setting and honest American goodies to eat, and a delicious pat of butter, even though not wrapped in a dewy glistening vine-leaf, is quite in the picture.

THE FOOD A MAN REALLY ENJOYS

Thank heaven, there has been a reaction against the "mussy" food so much in vogue some years ago. Men always refused to be enthusiastic over fussy salads such as our dear ones delight in. This autumn we have been reveling in melons—not the small spicy canteloupes, nor the flowing bowl of the watermelon, but great round yellow balls known as honey dews and casabas. They are smooth, fine-grained, sweet, and satisfying. You must have them as your first course, chilled but not too cold, and strictly innocent of bits of cracked ice.

The roast or meat course is as always. There should be a vegetable on the same platter, and the garnish is parsley or cress or some ornamental green. The Italians have a trick of serving something suspiciously resembling smilax. But there is nothing that a man really enjoys so thoroughly as a simple beefsteak surrounded with crisp dry French fried potatoes and a bit of tart green cress. Ball suppers are orthodox, although not so profuse as in years gone by. I really think most people enjoy the second supper—or early breakfast—of sausages, eggs, and champagne or coffee, even more than the dinner.

WE'RE SERIOUS, FORSOOTH

What is there that is new? But very little. Solomon, I believe, made the same complaint a few thousand years ago. Smart slang? I have heard none worth immortalizing. Slang gets out of fashion so quickly that one must be an adept to use it. To be caught with the argot of yesterday on one's tongue is worse than committing any solecism.

Indeed, there is nothing notable except our seriousness. We are thinking little of froth and frivolities these days—or we flatter ourselves that we are. The books and plays and writers who reigned in the Paris of three years ago and shone by reflected glory in London and Berlin have been packed off to their garrets. I do not think I would have the patience to read a light essay on nothing, nowadays. It would bore me to extinction. Nor could I sit

(Left) Just at the left, within the main entrance, is a spiral stone staircase of regal magnificence; it is lighted by a window in the roof above it. This staircase, which is richly carved and ornamented with the conventionalized fleur-de-lis, is supported on double columns which grow more ornate with each story. On the main floor these columns are of the severe Doric order; the Ionic follows, then the Corinthian with its elaboration of the acanthus leaf, and finally the rich composit column. The stairway is further enriched by a handsome balustrade, by many niches holding sculptured figures or ornaments, and by paintings by the sixteenth-century painter, Antonio Tempesta. These paintings are frescoes, painted upon the plaster, after the manner of the old Italians, and set in an architectural frame, so they become an integral part of the building

One of the points of interest about this palace is that local tradition has been, as it were, built into the palace itself. One entire room is given up to stories of Jupiter connected with his foster mother, the goat Amalthea, all of which form a play on the name of the town, Caprarola (from capra, a goat). The great hall above, known as the Hall of Hercules, owes its origin to a tradition that Hercules once appeared in this region. To prove his strength to the wondering peasants the god drove an iron bar so deep into the earth that when he drew it forth the waters rushed out, forming the nearby Lago di Vico. Members of the Farnese family appear over and over in the paintings, and even their retinue is represented, such as the dwarfs, painted on the door in the background.

The Farnese Palace is built on the plan of the sixteenth-century Italian fortress, in the form of a pentagon about a round central court. Around this court runs a richly decorated loggia, from which doors open into the various rooms, and in the angles between the pentagon and the circular gallery are spiral staircases. It is in the midst of this princely magnificence of an earlier day, that Mrs. Florence Baldwin, assisted by her daughters, Mrs. Henry G. Gray, who was Miss Edith Deacon, before her recent marriage, and the Princess Albert de Radziwill, has been for many months carrying on the work of making clothing for the Italian soldiers. In these halls once sacred to patrician Romans, the peasant women of Italy now stitch the heavy garments of the nation's soldiers and mingle sewing-machines with the priceless treasures of the Farnese. The palace is now in the possession of Prince Doria-Pamphilj-Landi.

That dwelling in marble halls need not be the cheerless thing it sounds is apparent in this essentially livable corner of a room which goes by the sounding title of the "Hall of the Angels." The intricate patterns of the floors in this palace are things to marvel at, and from floor to ceiling the decoration becomes more and more elaborate, yet always escapes being oppressive. The doors of the palace open into a box-bordered garden, set with black cypress trees planted three hundred years ago. As appears below, the design of the buildings does not end with the palace, but continues around the hill in a series of buildings ending in a convent and church

In the upper garden is a casino, also built by Vignola, and below it is one of the many fountains, mossy with age, which add to the beauty of the garden; the wall is guarded by caryatid figures in stone

It was the aim of Vignola to give to this palace the air of a citadel. Thus he placed it high, built it on the pentagonal form of an Italian fortress, and even added sham bastions to make it look more warlike

The bride's extremely original gown was of cloth of silver with wide sleeves of white tulle and a girdle of pearls. Her veil of rose point lace fell from a Russian head-dress of lace, and a cluster of orange blossoms marked where the veil and head-dress met. Her bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley and white roses was tied with a huge bow of white satin ribbon

In the morning of October 21, nearly sixty riders met at the Joseph E. Stevens estate near Jericho, with Harry I. Nicholas, the Master of Fox Hounds, in the saddle, and Thomas Allison in charge of the pack. After drawing the cover near the road line, the hounds were taken further infield, and within a few minutes they had a lively fox afoot. He led the field in a large circle, but they stuck to their work; the scent held well, and the hounds were able to trail at a brisk pace. After an hour, the fox dodged into his den, and the riders called it a day's work.

FROM the end of October on through the new year, hunting on Long Island is one of the favorite autumn and early winter sports. These photographs were taken especially for Vogue in the Meadow Brook country, Long Island, on October 21, when the Meadow Brook packs and riders followed the fox during the morning and the drag hunt during the afternoon of that clear autumn day. After a most satisfactory morning, the hunt met again at a quarter to three at the Roslyn station. With James C. Cooley, the Master of Fox Hounds, about forty or fifty riders arrived on horseback or in their motor cars to start their chase over the stiff country.

THE HUNT STARTS

The hounds were thrown in and ran east over rail fences to the place of Mr. Harry C. Phipps, then to those of Mr. Thomas Hastings, Mr. Samuel Willetts, and Mr. William Goodby Loew. After leaving which they crossed to the Harry Payne Whitney place for a short check. The line then led from the Prime place to that of Mr. Thomas Bailey and that of Mr. Clarence H. Mackay. Stiff fences did not hold up the field for long. The run ended near the Bull's Head Hotel.

At the left is Mr. Harry I. Nicholas, the Master of Fox Hounds, who was in charge during the morning drag hunt; and at the right is Mrs. James Abercrombie Burden.

No particular hurry to be off is shown by dogs, horses, or riders in this group which gathered before the meet started. The high standard and the large attendance show the popularity of hunting.

THE GREAT AMERICAN ATMOSPHERE

TO dare write about atmosphere now, here in New York, is not only a difficult proposition; it seems almost impertinence. It should scarcely be attempted without a number of new words fitted to express those new sensations and new visions which originate in this great new world. New words, the English language will sooner or later have to coin; for the words "atmosphere," "harmony," and other old-fashioned and melodious expressions are totally unsuited to render the impression made by this modern Babylon, which yet does clearly produce an impression complete and all its own.

WANTED, A VOCABULARY

When the idea of writing on this subject was first suggested, words that I thought could be said came to my mind, and I was keen and enthusiastic to say them. After reflection I realized that if I expected to write about atmosphere in the sense in which it is usually understood, the sense that most Americans have learned to know it in Europe, I should fail hopelessly. Vaguely I feel that atmosphere in the sense in which I have known it in my years on the continent is a thing so distant, belonging to another world, and so far from me now that I could not even adequately define its evanescent charm. Brought face to face with the subject, I have come to realize this feeling about it, which has doubtless long been formulated in my subconscious mind. Many situations and disappointments that have been rather puzzling over here became clear as soon as I concluded that the word "atmosphere" in the European sense could never be applied on this side of the Atlantic.

For one born and bred in Europe, this realization brought its own sadness, it is true; for atmosphere, a term as fleetingly undefinable as it is abstract, seemed suddenly to take a definite form and become the one and only thing which was of real importance in any person or place. For atmosphere is the outcome of harmony, and to be in harmony with one's thoughts and through this with one's surroundings is a rare and delightful thing. In Europe, sticks, stones, and human beings are apparently expressions of a long-continued and harmonious development. This brick was the pillow of a king, this face the inspiration of a great poet, this window the frame of a romance, and so on. America, while she possesses without doubt the life and throb, does not possess the harmony of thought and action which makes that mellow pulsing thing we know in Europe as atmosphere, and which results from long-inherited tradition and historic surroundings.

THE SINE QUA NON

This same harmony of thought and action, the true expression of oneself, with no concessions to a point of view of others (even though one's own may change with years), creates an individuality, and from such a personality emanates—atmosphere. Such a person could not be anything but perfectly natural and natural in its most delightful sense. To be consistently and absolutely natural is probably the greatest eccentricity any one can indulge in, and it is dared by but very few. Intercourse with genuine, sincere, and warm-hearted individuals is the only intercourse from which one really derives lasting benefit. Has America no atmosphere of this sort to offer?

There are people who say that this country is only fit to work in and that life when it is to take the shape of a holiday must be lived elsewhere. Personally I do not feel that the pursuit of strenuous business can ever preclude moments given over to the lighter sides of life and to less material aims. Yet it is true that when the selection of a holiday resort is to be made, nine times out of ten, some European destination is chosen in preference to any of the lovely spots in this country.

However, to return to that absence of atmosphere of which most people complain over here: is it not possible that those who are so quick to find fault, make the mistake of looking for something they can certainly find over in Paris or Rome, but which they can not possibly find here? Yet they fail to feel what, for lack of a better word I still have to call atmosphere (though of another form) which emanates from New York in a very positive way.

THE MAGICAL CITY

To me, New York is the most wonderful city of its kind in the world. No argument can convince me that it has not a something which though quite different, is yet equivalent to what in older countries would be called atmosphere. New York has its own individuality, its great and inspiring driving force, which is invigorating and unique and therefore of tremendous value. It is impossible that a city so thoroughly alive in its newness should not have some vibrating and vital message to convey to an unprejudiced and receptive mind.

It is so far given to few to realize that New York is beautiful from a painter's point of view.

Over here people seem still to think beauty can exist only in cities and buildings mellowed by age, in historic ruins or thoroughfares lined with old palaces—all things unknown to this country. There is no doubt about this being the conservative point of view, still adhered to by the crowd.

There are, however, people in the world who have conceived other ideals of beauty and are not blind to the newer standards of art, to the newness which is gradually taking a more definite form, especially to the new architecture of line in this country.

THE NEW BEAUTY

These people are able to appreciate the extraordinary fascination to be found in gigantic proportions and colossal agglomerations of masonry. One should judge the sordid and irritating vulgarity, amazing in its glaring and overwhelming crudity, as it strikes this ultra-modern mind with its new standards of beauty. Such a man may be absolutely unable to appreciate the "Mona Lisa;" he may agree with the great French critic of some thirty years ago, who was told of a man who considered Whistler's pictures too new, mere daubs of paint. "Ah, indeed," said he, "he is doubtless one of these idiots who still admire Raphael." Yet this modernist with his scorn of the master works of another age may be awed by the stupendous sight of Broadway at night with all its bewildering electric display.

There is something besides the blatant vulgarity emanating from this great hurrying city,—something great, which has so far been felt by few, and these few mostly artists, and sometimes foreign artists, into the bargain. They may detest it—and certainly a good many do, but all have received a new and lasting impression, and instinctively have felt this very individual and inspiring emanation, not to say atmosphere, arising from this great city. We who are cosmopolitans, we know what is lacking, we know what we miss, though if we had here the atmosphere of Europe we would be the first to condemn it as out of tune and to feel the absence of its harmonious setting. If at times a jarring note has set my teeth on edge, I soon remember all there is to compensate for it, as all must realize who are conscious of the wonderful vibrating current that makes life in America so much more exhilarating than in countries where everything has already the mellow air of completeness.

Once I went into a big store, which was bright, spacious, and practically fitted out. The owner had just spent vast sums of money to do up this place. Being much pleased with the result and knowing that I was interested in decoration of all kinds, he asked for my opinion. I unwisely answered, "Perfect, in its way, but you haven't the slightest atmosphere in your place. It's sanitary, that's all!" I never gave the matter another thought, till the year after, when passing the same establishment, I met the owner. He recognized me and I had to submit and be taken into the store to see the improvements.

"You said twelve months ago my place was sanitary only and had no atmosphere. Look at it now, and behold a ceiling from the Doge's Palace in Venice, and marble pillars everywhere. Forty thousand dollars have I spent. What about atmosphere now?"

This poor misguided man was convinced he had bought forty thousand dollars' worth of atmosphere. I fled in despair. I was in some way responsible. Still, he was happy, for now he had—atmosphere.

The Critic's Advice to Playwrights Who Contemplate Dramatizing Novels Is That of Punch to Persons Contemplating Matrimony: "Don't"

By CLAYTON HAMILTON

John Drew in the title rôle of "Major Pendennis" seems to have stepped right out of Thackeray's novel. The trouble is that the play ever stepped out of the novel at all, for "Pendennis" belongs on the bookshelf, not on the boards

WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY said of Thackeray that he represented the "gentlemanly interest" in British society; and a gentlemanly interest in anything whatever is exhibited so rarely nowadays in the theatres of New York that it is distinctly pleasant to be reminded, even faintly, of the great Victorian by Mr. Langdon Mitchell's dramatic version of "Pendennis."

The novels of Thackeray are very difficult to dramatize. For one thing, he painted life upon so large a canvas and created such a crowded world of characters and incidents that any transcription from his writings that is necessarily compressed within the two hours' traffic of the stage must fail to suggest the variety and vastness of his vision of the human comedy. All that the dramatist can do is to pick out a few characters and incidents and arrange them in a pattern which, set beside the teeming microcosm of the great creator, must seem comparatively vacuous. Very often, in the novels of Thackeray, dramatic passages appear that cry out for reproduction on the stage. Nothing could be more theatrical, for instance, than Colonel Newcome's death or the scene in which Rawdon Crawley strikes Lord Steyne; but moments such as these are surrounded utterly, like islands in a sea, by countless pages of penetrating satire and sympathetic sentiment. To make a play that happens only on the islands involves the secondary task of drying up the sea; and this is a process that can scarcely be regarded as creative. It is recorded that Thackeray always wept when he had to write the death-scene of a character that he had grown, through long association, to like with special fondness; and surely any playwright who dramatizes Thackeray might be expected to shed many tears over all the wise and witty and eloquent and tender passages which the exigencies of his craft require him to cast away.

Another difficulty for the dramatist arises from the fact that Thackeray cared very little about structure, and structure is of prime importance in a play. Mr. Howells spoke, perhaps excessively, when he said that Thackeray was lacking in "artistic sensibility." That brilliant intellect, that bottomless and boundless heart, were not "insensible" to anything, and least of all to art. No man who was not an artist, through and through, could ever write like Thackeray; and not even so meticulous a critic as Mr. Howells would dare to cast a doubt upon his mastery of style. The truth of the matter seems to be that Thackeray, like many other men who are endowed with an extraordinary magnitude of mind, was rather careless and just a little lazy. His major novels were published serially, in twenty-four successive monthly parts; and, after he was fairly started, he made them up as he went along. Each month, after he had gone to press, he would set forth on a keen vacation in his clubs and drawing-rooms. In lesser men, this social habit might have amounted to nothing more than loafing; in him, it amounted ultimately to a half-unconscious accumulation of material. But, when the time approached to go to press again, Thackeray was almost always forced to write in haste to catch the printer. Under the spur of immediate necessity, he nearly always wrote extremely well; for this great person had an ear, and, when a man is born with a quivering and tingling sense of sound, he can never quite descend to setting words awkwardly together; but in the hurry and the fever of necessitated composition, he frequently lost sight of that symmetry of structure which results only from the careful following of a pre-determined plan. He was a great writer, surely; but he was not a great builder. Once, when he had killed off a certain minor character, he subsequently introduced the same person, very much alive, in the ensemble of a drawing-room scene. The fact is that he had utterly forgotten what had gone before. This solecism did not matter; for, in the large world of his novels, he could afford to be as careless as the tutelary gods. But, in the little world—the intensified, restricted world—that is projected in a play, the dramatist can not afford to be careless and trust to any eloquence or ingenuity of writing to save his face before the public. Plays must be built, stone by stone, from the foundation upward: they can not be tossed up, in a hasty mood of eloquent enjoyment, month by month. Thackeray himself—to state the whole thing most emphatically—would have made a very bad dramatist. What he lacked was patience,—a minor virtue, but one without which the plodding playwright can not get along. The novels of Thackeray are great in nearly every quality except the one that is most necessary in a play,—that architectonic quality which counts more in the theatre than any literary skill in the elaboration of details.

"MAJOR PENDENNIS"

Considering the difficulties of his task, Mr. Langdon Mitchell has acquitted himself with credit in his dramatic version of "Pendennis." He has not succeeded in suggesting the crowded world of Thackeray's imagination; and, in view of the vastness of the material to draw from, the thinness of the fabric seems a little disappointing; but Mr. Mitchell's pattern shows at least the virtue of coherence, and he has made a play in which every part answers logically to every other part.

Mr. Mitchell has achieved this unity by focusing attention entirely upon the love-affairs of Arthur. Each of the four successive episodes deals with an amorous adventure; and, in each of these adventures, the inexperienced Pendennis is either impeded or aided and abetted by his worldly-wise and seasoned uncle, the doughty Major. By this arrangement, Major Pendennis becomes the dominant figure in the play,—a sort of deus ex machina who always arrives and reappears in the nick of time to rescue his callow nephew from the errors of Arthur's own "worst enemy."

The first episode narrates the machinations of the Major to release his nephew from the boy's infatuation with the beautiful and empty-minded Fotheringay. The second episode, which is set in Arthur's chambers in the Temple, reveals the gradual growth of the adoration of the hero by Fanny Bolton, the daughter of his laundress. In the third episode, the young Pendennis, on a point of honor, is about to marry Fanny when the Major intervenes and succeeds in saving him from this disaster by forcing him to get engaged to Blanche Amory. Then, in the fourth and final episode, the Major, having learned at last that Blanche is merely an affected and artificial creature, manages to break the engagement that he had previously engineered and succeeds in effecting a long-desired marriage between Arthur and Laura Bell.

The only trouble with this pattern is that it is necessarily monotonous. It becomes a little tedious to see the same young man besieged successively by four adoring heroines. But the plan, at least, has unity—a consummation devoutly to be wished; and the continual subjection of the unresourceful hero to attacks from the more deadly sex affords the playwright a desired opportunity to develop the Major into the dominating figure of the play.

It is unfortunate that the first act is much the most interesting of the four. The play, instead of growing more and more effective as the evening proceeds, grows less and less dramatic as one episode succeeds another. The second half is distinctly inferior to the first. This is a serious fault, for which the playwright must be held responsible. On the other hand, it must be stated that the dialogue, in all four episodes, is written with distinction. Mr. Langdon Mitchell knows

*Lola Fisher plays the leading rôle in "Good Gracious Annabelle," and the critics can not seem to decide which is the greater success, the actress or the play. his Thackeray; and he is more than ordinarily endowed with literary tact. Nobody—considering all the difficulties of the task—could have made a really good play from the great novel of "Pendennis," but it is scarcely possible to think of any other dramatist who could have made a play so nearly good as this. Mr. Mitchell has not succeeded in stirring the public to enthusiasm; but at least, he has sustained a "gentlemanly interest" in the great work of a great gentleman whom most of us remember fondly. For, if ever we should cease to care for Thackeray, it could be said, in the tragic words of the tortured Moor of Venice, that "chaos is come again."

"OLD LADY 31"

"Old Lady 31," by Rachel Crothers (suggested by a novel by Louise Forsslund), is the best American play of the current year and one of the best plays of recent seasons. It is necessary to speak out with emphasis when so fine a work of art as this is offered suddenly and unexpectedly to a public that, on the whole, is treated rather badly. The habitual attendant at our theatres may go to see a hundred plays, and ninety-and-nine of them may prove to be unworthy of attention; but when a piece like this little idyll of Miss Crothers' turns up unobtrusively within a stone's throw of Broadway, it rewards the faithful theatre-goer for all the wasted evenings that have gone before.

"Old Lady 31" is a fine play because it is truly beautiful and beautifully true. To insist upon the absolute identity of truth and beauty may seem, to initiated minds, superfluous; but, since this single axiom embraces all we know on earth and all we need to know, we must be grateful for every adventure that offers an occasion for repeating it. To see so true and beautiful a play as "Old Lady 31"—to love it; to laugh with it, to weep with it—affords a sort of reassurance to the soul, by making us remember that we know what we know.

The story is extremely simple. Abe is an old man, and Angie, his wife, is an old woman. They have lost all their money; but, by selling their little cottage and all their furniture at auction, they have managed to raise the hundred dollars that is necessary to secure admission for Angie to the Old Ladies' Home. Abe, on his part, expects to end his days at the Poor Farm, five miles away. But, when Angie arrives at the Home, with Abe dragging her tiny trunk along on a pathetic little hand-wagon, the inmates insist that he shall be admitted to the institution as Old Lady 31, in order that Angie may not be parted from her life-companion. Thus one old man is set down in the society of thirty old women; and the humor and the pathos of the play result from the inevitable reactions of character in this extraordinary situation.

No less than a dozen human beings are drawn with such truthfulness and tenderness that their actions and their words are greeted with both smiles and tears. The appeal of the play is irresistible,—like the appeal of life itself in those rare and scattered moments when we feel ourselves to be alive. The acting is as fine as the text; and this is saying a great deal, for no other American playwright can write such touching dialogue as Miss Crothers at her best. The stage-direction, also, is exemplary, and the sets have been elaborated with loving care.

"Old Lady 31" is the first play that has been offered on Broadway by a new producing manager, Mr. Lee Kugel. He deserves to make a fortune from this one production; but, however the chances of the intricate commercial game may fall, he is certain of the gratitude of those who care most deeply for the best that has been thought and felt in the American drama. Mr. Kugel has proved himself a good and faithful servant of the public; and, together with Miss Crothers, and Miss Emma Dunn, and Mr. Reginald

M A K E R S O F M U S I C

PROGRAM making is an art which few laymen, and not too many artists, understand. A jumble of pieces put together to fill the hour and a half of an artist's recital, this is not a true program. Many artists disagree as to a program's very purpose. A concert may exist with the general purpose of giving pleasure to the audience, or with the more specific ones of revealing the beauties of a certain school of composition, of creating a certain impression or emotion in the auditors or of exhibiting the artist's powers and hiding his faults. After years of debate certain traditional types of program have come to be recognized.

On the whole, programs may be divided into two general classes, those made for the benefit of the audience and those made for the benefit of the performer. The layman may naïvely suppose that all programs are made for the benefit of the listener, but a brief chat with any minor singer or third-rate violinist will change his opinion. There he will learn that the question is not so much what will give the audience pleasure as what will wring applause from it. The two aims are by no means identical. Every musician knows a sheaf of pieces, mostly trivial, which are supposed to be sure to bring applause, whether they be performed well or badly. There is a psychology of applause which musicians have studied deeply. There are well-known tricks, similar to the shaking of the curtain at the theatre, which seem to act directly on the hand-clapping nerve-centers. The unscrupulous musician will use these to the limit of his shrewdness, seeking to make the cheap thing appear beautiful, the easy thing difficult, the shoddy thing brilliant. The wise audience is on its guard lest it be taken in by these kindergarten tricks. The quack must be watched for in music as much as in medicine.

PROGRAM PSYCHOLOGY

But though artists of standing in their profession do not readily resort to these duperies, still they often put far too much of the ego into their programs. A program can and should be truly a work of art with its own beauty of unity, proportion, and design. But the programs of many artists seek but one sort of excellence, a certain psychological propriety which shall intrigue the audience pleasurably from one mood to the next. In piano programs the approved formula is something like this: First the "technical" piece, then the emotional, then the sentimental, and finally the bravura. This formula rests upon a widely held theory of "audience psychology." In substance this theory holds that a crowd of people begins with alert hearing and attention; that it is presently ready to be caught up into the heroic mood; and that thereafter it is dulled and relaxed, and must be successively cozened and startled if its interest is to be held. Above all, it must have a glittering picture in its mind as it leaves the concert hall. Concretely, the formula is likely to be the following: Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Liszt,—a fugue, a sonata, a group of waltzes and nocturnes, and a Hungarian rhapsody. Mr. Paderewski is a master of this type of program.

Such a program, of course, is "carefully made," but it is a question whether the care is bestowed in the most profitable direction. Leaving aside Mr. Paderewski, who at his best has the faculty of rising above all criticism, the artists who use this type of program are usually doing just what their third-rate brothers and sisters do: they are manipulating the psychology of applause. They are using the music to exploit themselves. The variety in their programs is distracting. Chopin cancels Bach in the mind

Few Programs Live Up to the High Standard of Unity, but a Folk-song Program Is One of the Charming Few

She has never sung in the United States, but she has been enthusiastically received in Spain, Italy, and South America and has sung with both Caruso and Bonci. Mme. of the listener and Liszt blots out the memory of Beethoven. What remains is the impression that Mr. So-and-So played all these pieces in a masterly way, and that he was equally happy in half a dozen dissimilar moods. And this, too often, is the only impression Mr. So-and-So intended to create.

But some one asks: "Why shouldn't an artist reveal his personality in his programs? Most concert-goers go to hear Paderewski, not to hear Beethoven." But this is hardly true. The concert audience (aside from the blasé "inner circle") has a real hunger for music. When it sighs at de Pachmann's exquisite phrasing of Chopin, it is enjoying, first of all, Chopin's music. But having enjoyed deeply, it humanly renders hero-worship to the artist who has given it pleasure. And the artist, being inevitably an egotist, usually imagines that the sighs were all for him.

What is wrong is not the fact that the artist does create a highly personal impression; it is that he should try to do so. There is such a thing as artistic humility. The great musicians all have it—or at least have had it at some time. It is the function of this humility constantly to remind the artist that he is not greater than his art. And by being the servant of his art, by seeking to play music and not personality, he becomes the master.

The good listener asks that a program shall give him some experience or impression, "something to take home." Mr. Hoffman provides such a program when he plays the whole twenty-six of Chopin's preludes at a single recital—a recital by no means dull or monotonous. Mr. Harold Bauer recently gave a concert in New York of "Famous Composers of By-gone Times," in which he revealed a quantity of delightful pieces which he had dug up out of oblivion. Last year, a most satisfying series of recitals was given in New York, each devoted to a single composer. From such a concert the hearer comes away a little more intelligent than he went, having lived for a space of time with a musician or a musical style. There is no reason why a program, while satisfying the inner man with its beauty and emotional proportion, should not also give something of value to conscious intelligence.

RACIAL GENIUS IN FOLK-SONG

There are, however, certain artists who have little trouble with their program making. These are the singers of folk-songs. Folk-songs have a flavor distinct from any which the conscious hand of man can give. Composed by nobody in particular and by everybody in general, they are the common denominator of a nation's feeling. To have listened to a program of folk-songs is to have lived through the experiences which are common to all humanity. Neither literature nor painting can reflect so accurately the racial genius.

It would need many novels and plays to convey as clear a notion of the French esprit as a group of Yvette Guilbert's songs can convey in twenty minutes. The incurable sentimentalism of the Teutonic races, the melancholy of the Scandinavian, the Briton's love of outdoor sports, all are explained in their songs. To listen to a group of folk-songs is to take the shortest route to a nation's heart.

So the folk-song singer has in his material itself two of the chief characteristics of a good program, homogeneity and variety. A good folk-song recital leaves one with a sense of something definite, something gained, something to be treasured. Because the pleasurable impression is so clear cut, the vogue of folk-song has been steadily increasing in this country. Several of the singers who have done most for it have recently been heard in New York.

HATS OFF TO MME. GUILBERT

Foremost of them all, of course, is Mme. Guilbert. Without a voice of special beauty, she has been able, by her exquisite taste and marvelous mimic power, to make vivid the genius of her race. Her programs are always admirable, even at times a little too much so. A recent recital of hers was devoted to the French songs of the middle ages. It was an authoritative and scholarly program introduced and annotated by the foremost living student of medieval music, Professor Jean Beck. Here were chanted the songs made up by the itinerant jugglers to attract their crowds; the songs of the minstrels who were the newspapers and gossip-mongers of their day; the songs by which the clergy sought to popularize the legends of Christianity. Here, too, Miss Isabeau Renaude, a charming dancer, "reconstructed" one of the dances of the wandering jugglers. It was all very interesting and illuminating, only—a trifle too learned. With her scholarly enthusiasm Mme. Guilbert caused, perhaps for the first time in her life, a few yawns.

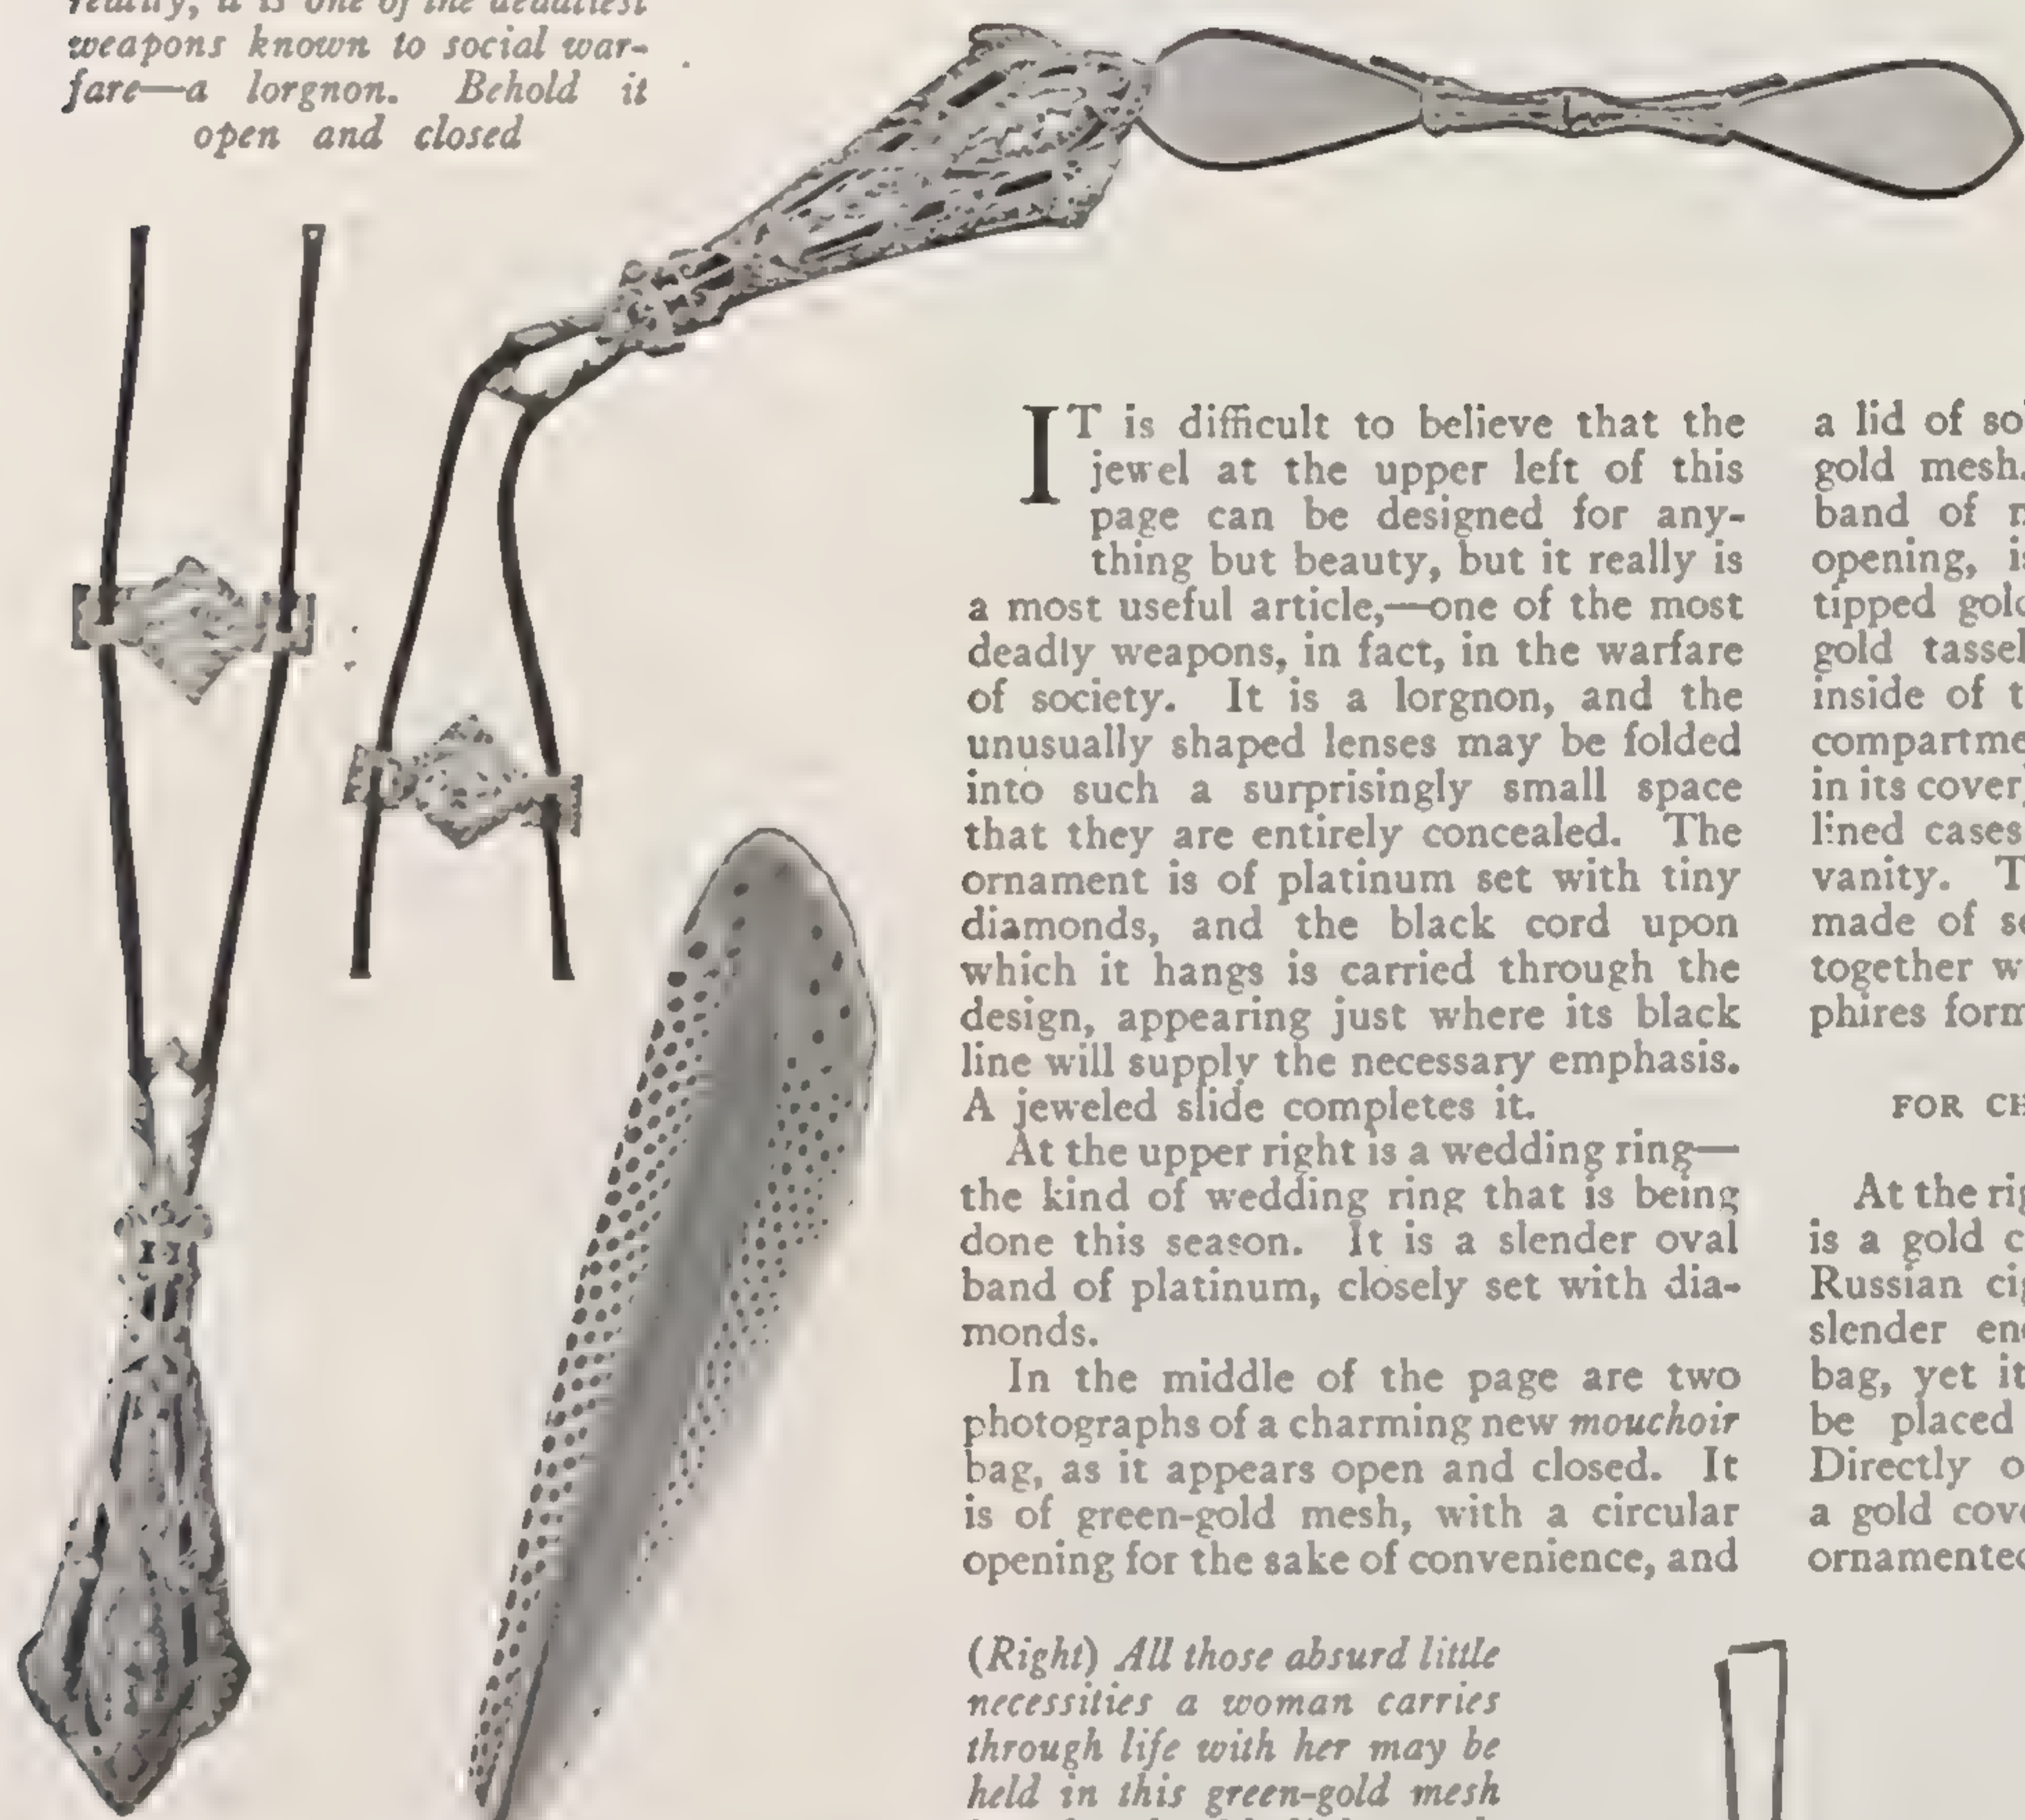

In another recital she sang some of the war-songs of the French soldiers from the time of Jeanne d'Arc to the present day. Mr. Clayton Hamilton, in an entertaining introductory address, prepared the audience for the striking fact that hardly any of these songs deal with war or patriotism or the profounder emotions. He explained it by saying that

THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING JEWeled

(Below) This extremely innocent appearing ornament is not so harmless as it seems; in reality, it is one of the deadliest weapons known to social warfare—a lorgnon. Behold it open and closed

IT is difficult to believe that the jewel at the upper left of this page can be designed for anything but beauty, but it really is a most useful article,—one of the most deadly weapons, in fact, in the warfare of society. It is a lorgnon, and the unusually shaped lenses may be folded into such a surprisingly small space that they are entirely concealed. The ornament is of platinum set with tiny diamonds, and the black cord upon which it hangs is carried through the design, appearing just where its black line will supply the necessary emphasis. A jeweled slide completes it.

At the upper right is a wedding ring—the kind of wedding ring that is being done this season. It is a slender oval band of platinum, closely set with diamonds.

In the middle of the page are two photographs of a charming new mouchoir bag, as it appears open and closed. It is of green-gold mesh, with a circular opening for the sake of convenience, and

(Right) All those absurd little necessities a woman carries through life with her may be held in this green-gold mesh bag dotted with little pearls

(Above) Economy dies an awful death when one keeps one's cheque book in a gold cover; one really must take it out on every possible occasion

Bracelets really must be set with large stones, this season,—it's being done. That mere trifle at the right of the photograph is a lorgnon. It may be folded into almost nothing at all and slipped into one's glove. Fan and gloves from B. Altman; jewels in this photograph and in the two ovals above from Dreicer a lid of solid gold covered with green-gold mesh. The overhanging pointed band of mesh, which falls from the opening, is fringed with little pearl-tipped gold chains, and a pearl-tipped gold tassel completes the bag. The inside of the lid is divided into three compartments (one has a mirror set in its cover), which open to reveal velvet lined cases for coins and accessories of vanity. The bag hangs from a chain made of several fine gold chains held together with gold rings. Caliber sapphires form the clasps

FOR CHEQUES AND CIGARETTES

At the right, in the middle of the page, is a gold cigarette case, copied from a Russian cigarette box of wood. It is slender enough to be carried in the bag, yet it holds enough cigarettes to be placed hospitably on the table. Directly opposite it is photographed a gold cover for a cheque book. It is ornamented with bands of engine-turning, and it is made in a size which will fit conveniently into one's bag when one is shopping.

In the lower right-hand corner of the page is a vanity case of black enamel, an effective background for its jeweled monogram. It is extremely narrow,—almost all smart vanity cases are—but it is large enough to contain all the usual accessories. In the same photograph are a lip stick of engine-turned gold with a cabochon sapphire in its slide, and a slender oval powder puff-box, also of engine turned gold.

At the lower left are illustrated two new bracelets, and the bracelets of this season, by the way, are characterized by their large stones. The upper bracelet is entirely of diamonds, while the lower one is of diamonds and caliber emeralds. Both are flexible, and both are of extremely fine workmanship. In the same photograph is a lorgnon which may be folded into almost nothing at all and tucked away into the glove. It is of platinum, set with diamonds.

(Above) A wedding ring of platinum closely set with diamonds makes it surprisingly easy to promise to love, to honor, and even to obey

(Above) A cigarette case like this one is small enough to slip into the privacy of one's bag, yet large enough to place hospitably upon the table

Vanity cases must be just as slim as fashion demands their owners to be, yet they must contain all the necessities of a well-made complexion. It is difficult, but this black enameled one can do it. The details in the photograph are a lip stick and a powder-puff case. Jewels in this photograph from Theodore B. Starr

CAN'T you remember the time—it is really safe to confess to it, it wasn't so very long ago—when, if a woman smoked in an American hotel, people gazed at her in wide-eyed wonder and murmured apologetically, "She must be an actress." Those were the days when, if a woman lit her after-dinner cigarette in a restaurant, the other diners stole sidelong glances at her when they thought no one was looking, while delicious little thrills chased each other up and down their backs, and they felt that at last they knew what life in a wicked city really was.

SMOKES FOR WOMEN!

And then the Ritz-Carlton hotel opened its hospitable doors, decided that women were people, and let it be known, quite as a matter of course, that no woman need leave her cigarette behind when she entered any of its restaurants. Other smart hotels quickly followed its example—and now there is no more thrill in seeing a woman smoke in public than there is in seeing her use her finger-bowl.

So far, no frightful consequences seem to have ensued from women's smoking; the world seems to go rolling on much as it did before. And the fact remains that, in the fingers of a charming woman, a cigarette is a most effective trifle,—just another weapon in her armory of coquetties.

IN STRICTEST CONFIDENCE

It doesn't seem quite fair to reveal the secrets of one's sex but really, you know, scarcely any of the women who smoke do so from a craving for tobacco. To most of them smoking is not so much a necessity as it is an indoor sport. Cigarettes, like husbands, are an acquired taste,—but cigarettes are rather painfully acquired, usually. There is no royal road to smoking. If, after earnest endeavor, and repeated efforts, one finds that she simply can not master the art, she should have enough regard for the feelings of her fellow creatures to confine her adventures in nicotine to the privacy of her own boudoir. If a woman can do it gracefully, smoking is an asset; if she can't, it's a liability. It is a most useful

(Above) A gold cigarette holder collapses to fit into this tiny gold case, which hangs on a chain or bracelet

(Above) It is such accessories as this that make women take up smoking as an indoor sport. It is a cigarette case of gold and platinum; upon the top is a view of a Japanese garden, exquisitely done in various shades of enamel

SMOKING ACCESSORIES FROM CARTIER

A box worthy of holding even one's most special cigarettes is this one of golden brown wood. The cover is an oil painting of a picturesque corner of a Versailles garden, and it is framed with gold. From far Australia came the amber colored petrified wood, hard as metal, for the ash receiver. Its stand and top are of blue and white enamel accomplishment, sometimes,—think how lighting a cigarette can do away with an awkward pause; think how selecting a cigarette can give one time to think.

Mere men say that surprisingly few women can tell the difference between an ordinary Turkish cigarette and one of a fine grade of Turkish tobacco. The rare woman who can tell that difference is extremely particular about her cigarettes. She goes to an exclusive shop and has them made to her order. She realizes the sensitiveness of fine tobacco, knows how carefully it must be used, and treats it accordingly. She keeps her cigarettes in a glass box with a compartment containing half a lemon; she has learned, you see, that there is something about the aroma of a lemon, something in the pungent oil of the skin, which keeps Turkish tobacco properly moist and fresh.

WHAT SMOKING LEADS TO

Perhaps the pleasantest things about the cigarette are all the little accessories that it leads to,—all those necessary absurdities that she who does not smoke may never possess. There are cigarette cases, innocent-looking affairs of harmless gold or innocuous enamel, which appear to contain nothing more exciting than one's latest edition of calling cards. There are amber-tipped cigarette holders—they are being done to a great extent this season—of every imaginable kind, to keep one at just the correct distance from one's cigarette. There are cigarette lighters, mere trifles of enamel and gold—yes, and they really work, too. There are match safes, which one knows instinctively have come direct from Paris. There are cigarettes, slim, tipped with gold, marked with the most decorative monograms a designer can draw from his imagination, scented with the most subtle and provocative of perfumes—cigarettes that are just as feminine as petticoats. These are the things that make a woman feel she really must take to tobacco; it's a strong-minded woman indeed who can totally abstain, not from cigarettes, but from their accessories. They are the things that make many a good resolution go up in smoke and reduce many a lofty ideal to ashes.

SMART FASHIONS FOR LIMITED INCOMES

Velvet Continues to Be Formal or Informal as the Case May Demand, and Becoming Even without a Demand

That tried and trusty acquaintance, the jersey suit, is as popular on the ice as on the golf course. It has found, too, a close friend in fur; they are frequently seen together

THE out-of-door costume nowadays claims a great deal of the wise woman's attention at this season of the year, whether she intends to spend it in town or in the country. In planning some odds and ends for sports wear the long-popular wool jersey comes again to the fore; many of the winter's smartest skating and walking suits are of this warm, loosely woven fabric. Furs, such as undyed muskrat, natural and dyed opossum, Hudson seal, and raccoon, may be added at will, though the solid block of color of the jersey in its natural state is always effective against golf green or ice.

The model shown at the upper left momentarily leaves the regulation lines of the sports suit, to become somewhat Russian in effect. If fur of some sort is to be used with this suit, the buttons might also consistently be of the same fur. In the model illustrated they are of jersey. Among other colors, green, it should not be forgotten, is always available, as green is very smart this season. The straight rather full skirt is shirred at the waist under a narrow belt similar to the one shown on the coat. Like many of the season's turbans, the one sketched with this suit runs to a high point in front, after the warlike way of the helmet. It is an ideal example of a skating hat and would look well in fur, or in a dark purple velours embroidered in black soutache braid.

The satin sports skirt is a luxurious necessity for the woman spending the winter months in a warm climate. Sports satin, to be sure, is not entirely a novelty, though the satin now favored has developed durable qualities beyond those of the satin hitherto used. The skirt at the lower left of the page may be made up with excellent effect in a pastel shade or robin's egg blue or the prevalent green gold; a soft material like satin is well adapted to its desirable fulness; it was designed especially for that material. Buttons of the material and heavy silk stitching are used in decoration. The blouse shown with this skirt carries out the lines of the regulation sports blouse in oyster white silk jersey with hemstitched seams and black satin tie.

Velvet holds its own as a stuff that afternoon dresses are made of, perhaps because it is formal or informal as the case may demand and becoming even without a demand. One may find one's favorite shade in French velvet, chiffon velvet, or velvetina, to suit the taste and need. At the top of the page, at the right, is an example of a very distinctive model which could be easily carried out by a capable seamstress. Delft blue chiffon velvet might be happily combined here with silver flying squirrel, the revers and gilet might be of silver net over platinum satin or Georgette, with a small band of the fur to finish the high collar. The skirt falls into the fur band in soft plaits, thus avoiding the appearance of

The soft chiffon velvet frock and its even softer fur are in keeping with the receptive mood of afternoon. The tight puffed sleeves deserve and receive a moment's attention

A sports skirt of a very heavy quality of sports satin goes south for the winter with its owner, and that she may enjoy it to the utmost in any sport, it is made very full extreme fulness. A velvet ribbon sash in a deeper shade of blue runs through an opening in front and crosses itself at the back. Long tight sleeves with a dropped puff at the shoulder give the final touch to the costume.

The velvet street dress illustrated at the lower right of the page has an unusual long-waisted bodice with a small vest pocket for change or watch. For the shawl collar and gauntlet cuffs one might use mole edged with a narrow band of white ermine or rabbit; if desired, the fur collar and cuffs may be made detachable, and the neck and sleeves may be finished with rows of stitching, for some of the late designs from Paris evidence this kind of severity.

Between the lines from Paris comes the news that the majority of hats worn are in satin or satin antique. After the popular run of the felt and velours cloth hats of the autumn and early winter, this might indicate that many of the spring hats, especially those designed for southern and sports wear, would be of the materials used in the early spring costumes. The hats are both in large and small shapes and are severely plain.

A sweater which can be worn by the elderly and the young woman is this one of knitted angora wool in a heather mixture of greens or browns; $12.75. The mushroom hat is of gray jersey cloth; $18

The new combination of materials is shown in this set which, though very youthful is also appropriate for the elderly woman when she motors; scarf, $9; hat, $6

An original effect is given to this set in jersey cloth by polka dots of white angora braid and this braid outlines the scarf and the turban. It may be had in green, blue, rose, yellow, and sulphur; $20

In this light blue and yellow set of jersey knit cloth is shown the tam-o'-shanter which, since it is becoming, continues to be very popular among sportswomen; $35

SKATING is still the popular sport for town and country, and the new sets of cap and neckpiece are especially smart when they are worn with the suits or sweaters. Heretofore scarfs have usually been knitted, but now those made of such materials as jersey cloth, suède, and duvetyn are very smart. Variety is obtained not only in the material and in the charming color combinations but also in the trimming, which consists in some instances of bright silk flowers, in others of appliques of leather, and in still other instances of designs cut in the material and showing a bright under facing.

THE POPULAR SWEATER

A sweater which is especially suited to the slender figure is that illustrated at the bottom of the page. It is a pull-on sweater of soft rose colored yarn. The patch pockets on either side are knitted on the sweater, and the sash which runs through loops is tied in a loose knot at the front. A large sailor collar of white angora wool lends warmth. The tam-o'-shanter worn with this sweater is knitted of white brushed wool. This cap may also be had in other colors such as purple, blue, rose, and green.

A COMBINATION HAT AND SCARF

In one of the shops is shown a combination hat and scarf which is excellent for motor wear for all ages and which for a young girl might serve for street wear. The hat is of stitched white felt with sapphire blue duvetyn forming the crown and the long scarf. This scarf is woven through the hat from the back, and it is finished at the end with a loose

Right: The very becoming tam-o'-shanter is of white wool; $2.25. The smart and comfortable sweater is of soft rose colored yarn with a white collar; $9.50

knot. It is a particularly becoming affair.

Another sweater which is particularly good because of its lightness and warmth is that illustrated at the upper left of the page. The collar fastens up to the neck or rolls back and opens in a deep point at the front. The buttons, which are of bone, match the sweater in color. The mushroom hat worn with this sweater is made of gray jersey cloth trimmed with white and blue worsted. The trimming consists of two tassels at one side and stripes on the crown. Large covered buttons of blue jersey dot the hat between the worsted stripes. This hat may also be had in other color combinations.

The set illustrated second from the upper left is made of duvetyn and comes in many shades. The turban has a small upturning brim and a full shirred crown; bright colored wool flowers trim it. The scarf is made of the same material as the hat and is trimmed with the same brilliant wool flowers. The edge is buttonholed with yellow worsted.

A NOVEL EFFECT

Something new in cap and scarf is the set shown at the upper right. It is made of jersey cloth with white angora braid. The turban has a small rolling brim which turns up in the back and comes low over the eyes in front. The top of the crown is drawn together in a rosette, and the edge is also bound with angora.

Another novelty in these sets is that shown second from the right. In the cap of knit jersey cloth the head band is cut with alternating oblongs and diamonds which reveal a bright yellow underfacing; the scarf is bordered in the same fashion. The piping is also of the yellow jersey cloth.

Christmas Gifts Suggestions

Did you select your Christmas gifts from the last issue of Vogue? If you didn't, here are some 300 more from which to choose. The Gifts Time Table on page 18 will tell you just how much time you still have to order.

LONG before you even began to think of Christmas, Vogue's editors were busy for you, conferring with manufacturers, salesmen, craftsmen; journeying from the magasins of the Rue de la Paix to the scented godowns of Peking; ransacking shop, studio, and atelier for Christmas gifts for this Holiday Number of Vogue.

Literally thousands of beautiful things have passed under Vogue's critical eye in the last four months. From them, Vogue's editors have chosen those which unite distinction, perfect workmanship, and the best shopping values.

Now though you took your Baedeker in hand and sallied out with unlimited patience, time, and credit to search for Christmas gifts, you could not possibly gather together such a collection of really exclusive gifts as those which Vogue offers you in the following pages, no matter how skilful a shopper you may be.

There is a perfectly simple and obvious reason. Vogue is an expert professional buyer, with all an expert's advantage. It shops for ten thousand women where you shop for one. It has a wide acquaintance with all the people who make exclusive things; influence to have specialties made up; years of experience in selecting merchandise and judging values.

Every bit of its knowledge and influence has been employed in choosing these Christmas gifts. They are really values, they are really new, and they are really exclusive. They appear—usually for the first time—simultaneously in Vogue and in shops or studios which originate them.

If you have used Vogue at Christmas, we need not urge you to avail yourself of its services again. If you have not—may we extend to you a cordial invitation to make up your Christmas list from the following pages and accept Vogue's assistance in this, the most taxing and difficult problem of the whole shopping year?

WHAT TO GIVE for CHRISTMAS

On this and the pages following you will find a list of Christmas gifts, carefully selected and arranged. From baby to grandmother, all are taken care of; the suggestions run from furs at $5,000 to dainty inexpensive gifts costing but a few pennies. Not only is the name of the article given under its appropriate classification but the numbers of the pages on which you will find the articles described and, perhaps, illustrated. Unfortunately a number of advertisements displaying gifts were received too late to be classified. A glance through the advertising section will reveal many articles that are no less attractive because they have escaped mention.

the soup of the epicure

The brain behind the dinner

Serving Franco-American Soups is one of the marks of the shrewd home manager. It indicates that she has thought.

"Because I use the Franco-American, my soup is always good. I save my cook's time to make the rest of the dinner better. I have at my instant disposal a new and delightful variety of soups, many of which cannot be made at home."

Arguing something like this, she rightly concludes that she practices a genuine economy in the regular daily use of Franco-American Soups, because she converts the money she spends into the largest possible returns in social satisfaction, health and convenience.

Franco-American Soups have finesse, the inimitable French touch, a flavor at once exclusive and distingué.

Perhaps your preference is for a thick soup. Then let the Franco-American Mock Turtle, the Vegetable thick, or the Ox Tail thick tell your palate a new story of how rich, delicious and satisfying a soup can be.

AS a general thing the selection of Goodyear Cord Tires is prompted by a sense of the practical quite as much as by a sense of discrimination. For, just as these tires are more distinctive in appearance, so are they more enduring in service; just as they are more comfortable, so are they more free from hazard; just as they are more to be desired, so are they more to be trusted. They are "first family" tires the country over—purely by right of quality.

Distinctive Table Linens

When you begin to explore the field of Table Linens in search of things that are more beautiful and elaborate than the common run of goods, you must inevitably come to "The Greatest Treasure House of Linens in America".

515. Scalloped Damask. Breakfast, Luncheon and Dinner Cloth with Napkins to Match.

Our stock of high quality goods in all their infinite variety far eclipses the ordinary resources of stores that do not specialize in Linens. Repeatedly we hear the comment made that "the only place in New York to get Linens is at McCutcheon's".

French and Italian Lace, in Filet, Crepon, etc., combined with hand embroidery; handsome and attractive hand embroidery from Madeira; marvelous plain, fine Damask whose quality causes it to shine with satin-like sheen.

We have many special kinds of Linen wares not to be found elsewhere. In our search for original styles we ransack the corners of the earth. From China, India, Sicily, Mexico, Spain, Porto Rico, Russia, etc., we import odd handiwork on Linen for the housewife who wants novel and distinctive things to give a touch of originality to her table.

One of the best cures for the worry wrinkles which result from wondering where one can place the family photographs is this leather photograph portfolio. It is lined with silk, and it may be bought in practically all shades; 13½ by 17 in.; $25

ON HER DRESSING-TABLE

"TOM says that my face is all puckered up, and so I have dashed down this morning to get a treatment and a forehead strap, and do you blame me? Who wouldn't get wrinkles when, just as I have had my boudoir done over, the walls paneled, and not a note to spoil the harmony, Tom's Aunt Mary writes that she is coming to make us a visit. You see I have banished all the family photographs, Aunt Mary's among them. But, my dear, how could I hang in my Louis Seize room a portrait of Aunt Mary in pantaloons and hair net seated on a stool at the feet of her parents? Now Tom's people are perfect dears, with the exception of this one failing of hoarding family photographs with which they have inundated me ever since our marriage, and I wouldn't hurt Aunt Mary's feelings for the world, but what shall I do?"

A CURE FOR WRINKLES

What she was doing then was taking her worry wrinkles to a beauty specialist, but as chance would have it her plaint was overheard, and it struck a sympathetic note in the hearer who had long been wondering what to do with her own family photographs, now that it is not considered restful to cover the walls of one's boudoir with them. The discovery was made that charming portfolios are being fashioned in leather; they come in practically all shades. They are lined with silk; they will protect the photographs from the dust and the fading effects of the light, and they are accessible when "Aunt Mary" appears. Overcrowded walls are a thing of the past. The portfolio is illustrated at the top of this page.

As for those telltale little wrinkles in the forehead and around the eyes, they are often the result of frowning over some trivial problem like the one quoted above, and are not due to advancing years, though the effect is the same. But in either case the wise woman at the first hint of a line takes pains instantly to apply curative and preventive measures.

One clever specialist has brought back from the Himalayas the secret of an oil which is patted on to the lines, and over them is strapped a forehead strap of white satin lined with white kid, so shaped that the corners of the eyes are protected; this prevents crow's feet. If the treatment is persevered in, it is most efficacious even in very obstinate and pronounced cases of wrinkles. The strap may be worn not only at night but while one is reading and writing during the day if one is inclined to frown. This forehead strap costs $6.50.

The oil which is used with the strap is a so-called muscle oil, and as the orientals understand the care of the body, it is a great advantage to have such a treatment introduced here. The oil costs $1, $2.50, and $5, according to size of bottle. This specialist also produces a delicate powder which is soothing and which yet adheres well. It is daintily perfumed, and it is made in shades which match a blonde or a brunette complexion. It costs $2.50 a box.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR SOAP

There are some skins which soap seems to affect disadvantageously, so a specialist has originated some beauty grains as a substitute. They may be put into the palm of the hand and with a little water they form a lather with which the face is gently washed. This method is considered to improve the texture of the skin; it cleanses and refines the pores, and it is also very refreshing. This same specialist makes a delightful lotion which is put on as a foundation for powder. A box of the beauty grains and a box of the lotion appear below.

Note.—Readers of Vogue inquiring for names of shops where dressing-table articles are purchasable should enclose a stamped and addressed envelope for reply, and state page and date of this issue of Vogue.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE

AS the war continues the numerous demands on American charity also continue. America has responded generously, but there is still great need for contributing to charities both at home and abroad. To say that America is tired of donating to these good causes would not be true, but nevertheless it is safe to predict that more money would be forthcoming if some tangible return were given for it.

A SHOP FOR CHARITY

It was with this object in view that Mrs. Benjamin S. Guinness, Mrs. Harry H. Duryea, and Mrs. Julian L'Estrange decided to found a shop, the proceeds of which would be divided among several charities, while the shop itself would fill a long felt need. In London, this same idea had been carried to success by Lady Edgerton and Mrs. Carlyn Bellairs. There was no reason why it could not be equally successful in New York; and so the Zahrah Company, Inc., was founded.

The charities among which the profits will be divided are extremely worthy ones. The Virginia Day Nursery and St. Mary's Free Hospital are both charities in which the public has long been interested. Mrs. Julian L'Estrange is devoting all her efforts for the benefit of the Three Arts Club of London, of which Queen Alexandra is the president. Mrs. L'Estrange has won over Sir Herbert Tree to her cause, and he, too, is much interested in it. Mrs. Guinness is particularly interested in the Millicent Sutherland Ambulance, which is under the patronage of the Duchess of Sutherland. Beside these four charities, there will be donations to such others as may be designated.

The shop itself is a charming place, and its wares fill almost every feminine want. And perhaps the pleasantest part of those wares are their prices; they are most unexpectedly low. There are tea-gowns, evening wraps, boudoir caps, and negligees, all of absolutely original design. Mrs. Guinness is showing her charming lacquer tables and screens, and her exquisite wall panels. The shop is specializing, too, in Christmas gifts—the sort of things that no one else will think of. Many of these have been designed by Lady Colebrook, who is well-known in England as an artist. There are also toys, straight from France, among which are some designed by Mme. Pouplet, some of whose toys are in the Metropolitan Museum. Lady Northcliffe has sent over from London some of her exquisite artificial flowers, which are on sale, and there is a special brand of cigarette, of extremely pure tobacco, which is manufactured especially for this shop.

FOR THE STAGE

Many smart women have already given their orders for gifts or costumes, and several actresses will wear, in their winter successes, costumes designed by the Zahrah Company. Among these is Miss Virginia Fox Brooks playing in George Bernard Shaw's play "Getting Married."

A quaint likeness of the manikins which stand stiffly around in other shops is this living manikin who adds charm to the gowns of Zahrah, Inc.

The Liberty Brougham

A Strikingly Beautiful Small Car.

THE instant success of the Liberty Brougham in New York among a clientele of the utmost discrimination indicates the exclusive character of this beautiful car.

Already in daily use by some of the best known New Yorkers, the Liberty Brougham satisfies a need never before met.

It is a distinct departure from the closed bodies of all other makes—distinguished by square lines, the smartest of custom made bodies, a low chassis, and a general appearance of correct exclusiveness which is the essence of distinction.

That has been accomplished which hitherto has only been attempted, by building from the first a small car, remarkably roomy inside, exactly adapted in size, character and finish to the use of people of taste and the definite motoring requirements which come of long metropolitan experience.

The Liberty Brougham is the product of the combined brains of manufacturers and designers who for years have produced only the best in motors.

Its unusual character is evidenced not only in its perfect and distinctive grace, but also by the restrained good taste, the avoidance of over decoration and elaboration, the simple beauty of line and fitting, which alone are appropriate to an environment of genuine refinement.

It is conservative to say that the Liberty Shopping Brougham is perhaps the most exquisite creation which has ever been placed on the American market.

The price is twenty-three hundred and fifty dollars.

WHAT THEY READ

SINGULARLY appropriate to the Christmas season is Mr. Rihbany's book undertaking to interpret scripture in the light of the author's acquaintance with the Holy Land. A good many years ago a painter, who had long resided in the region and studied its flora, fauna, and topography, painted a great many pictures which showed the present aspect of the land chiefly distinguished to the modern world as the scene of the ministry of Jesus. Only within the last few months, George Moore attempted in "The Brook Kerith" to show us the Holy Land as it was 1900 years ago, and to explain the sacred mystery of the resurrection by an ingenious assumption. Mr. Moore had come to his subject after nearly twenty years of Bible study, but neither he nor the painter knew the Holy Land as it was known to a native who had lived there until early manhood amid social and economic conditions and customs little changed since the birth of Christ. Perhaps had Mr. Moore known Mr. Rihbany "The Brook Kerith" might have been a very different book, at least in the matter of its social and economic setting, though such acquaintance could hardly have changed Mr. Moore's attitude toward the Christian mystery. Mr. Rihbany has been brought up in the straightest of orthodox Christian sects and nurtured in all the traditions of the land, traditions which run back to the very days of the Savior, but he has broken away from much of inherited belief and traditions, and it has remained for him to write a book in which many of the incidents, characters, and customs of the New Testament are clothed with a fresh meaning for us who have persistently interpreted them in the light of our occidental life and preconceptions. How interesting would it be to know what a Syrian would say to the implications of "The Syrian Christ," a Syrian who had not abandoned the Trinitarian faith, but who had lost touch with native custom, and who had come to know America.

this delightful volume is a native Syrian, who for twenty years has preached in American churches, and who now occupies one of the most notable Unitarian pulpits of Boston. As a Unitarian Mr. Rihbany will perhaps not be an acceptable interpreter of Christian doctrine to Trinitarians, but no person professing Christianity in any of its myriad modifications can well afford to neglect what this author has to say. He approaches his subject with the utmost reverence, and says little which might be taken as dissent from the Trinitarian view. His purpose, indeed, is not controversial. He comes to us as one born and nurtured to early manhood in the very region of the birth and ministry of Christ, and amid social conditions, customs, and ideals which have changed little in 1900 years. What he undertakes is to interpret New Testament history and teaching in the light of what he knows touching the land, language, and people of his own birthplace. The effect of his interpretation will seem to any but the stiffest literalists most illuminating, and it can hardly be other than comforting and reassuring even to those whose orthodoxy is strictly Trinitarian. Mr. Rihbany has made an extraordinary book. (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company, $1.50 net.)

"MADEMOISELLE MISS" deserves to be read by every one at this Christmas season, for it tells among many interesting things of about as odd a Christmas celebration as can be imagined. This little volume is made up of the letters of an American woman which give some notion of her work as what may be called "executive nurse" in a French army hospital not far behind the firing line. She worked fourteen hours a day at the most trying of tasks. She cared for desperately wounded men, though she had insufficient appliances and little help, and yet she remained well and cheerful. The humor, sweetness, and courage of the wounded, some of them Arabs, most of them French common folk, give one a new and inspiring glimpse of French character. At Christmas the author prepared an illumination, a Père Noël as equivalent of Santa Claus, and many gifts, to the huge delight of her patients. They loved her; they called

The closed car has no substitute. Limousines, sedans, coupes, and coupelets have become essential to uncramped living. They are the social necessity. They identify the men and women whose presence is in demand. Closed cars are conspicuous, even in thick traffic, and the superiority of high-quality cars is evident at sight. The real is unmistakable. After they were sent away, they wrote her many letters, sent her postcards, begged that she remember them, and when she returned after a leave of ten days they urged her never again to leave them. ## HOLIDAY FICTION

THE ROMANCE OF A CHRISTMAS CARD, by KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN, really more than fulfils its title, for it contains two romances. A village in New Hampshire is the chief scene of the tale, and the folk concerned are the family and parishioners of a village parson. His second wife is a clever helpful woman, and the Christmas cards which she designs bring home two wanderers who had almost been given up as permanent exiles. One guesses the end almost from the beginning, and the tale is really elementary in its simple romanticism, but it is the kind of tale that accomplishes such miracles of recall as the Christmas card itself accomplished. Alice Erle Hunt supplies illustrations in color and decorative head and tail pieces for the chapters. (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company, $1 net.)

THE RISING TIDE, by MARGARET DELAND, might well have had for sub-title the phrase, "A Comedy of Feminism." Those on either side who take the matter of present day feminism too seriously will quarrel with Mrs. Deland and think her either a secret advocate of one or the other view, or, worse still, an indifferent onlooker in search of material for profitable comedy. Partisans will insist also upon drawing this or that moral from the book, but it may safely be taken for granted that the author wrote with an artistic purpose, that she loved both of her young girls, though they stood for very different ideals, that she felt the humor of extravagant and uncompromising youth in one of them, and also its pathos. Mrs. Deland has given us pretty nearly every phase of opinion upon the feminist movement as mirrored in the views of her many dramatic personae, and while steadily preserving the spirit of comedy at almost every point, she has succeeded in offering us tense moments and poignant situations. The interest of the story, indeed, never languishes. Perhaps most judicious people will protest at the author's final disposal of her rebellious girl, and certainly many will contemplate with uneasiness the future of the young woman and her husband, but, fortunately for Mrs. Deland, she is not bound to give us a sequel to her entertaining story. (New York: Harper and Brothers, $1.35 net.)

THE NEST-BUILDER, A NOVEL, by BEATRICE FORBES-ROBERTSON HALE, whose "What Women Want" is perhaps the best and most temperate statement of the case for equal suffrage and kindred causes, endeavors, under the form of fiction, to make the argument for the strong, motherly, domestic woman as more truly the husband, "house-band" than her consort of the artistic temperament. Unhappily for the artistic value of the book, Mrs. Hale is herself propagandist rather than novelist. She lacks the creative faculty, and fails to endue her puppets with life, breath, and motion. Her young man of the artistic temperament is not merely that, but, as the first chapter abundantly shows, an unspeakable cad, without breeding, without a decent regard for the feelings of those about him. Fortunately for this long self-expatriated American, who despises and misunderstands his native land, he weds a fine motherly English girl, who takes him in hand and does for him, but fails to nurse the cad out of his system, until she finds him wounded in a hospital as a soldier of the Entente. As a vindication of the mothering instinct, the book has significance, but as a picture of human life it is totally unconvincing. (New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company, $1.35 net.)

HEAD WINDS, by JAMES B. CONNOLLY, gives us eight rather long short stories, in several of which the author deserts his favorite scenes and folk to depict men and things in Spanish America. The best of these tales are those that deal with Mr. Connolly's old friends, the New England fishermen "out o' Gloucester"; the least distinctive and truthful are those of Latin-American persons and scenes. The author opens his book with "The Adoption", which seems to betray a vain effort at natural dialogue. In "The Trawler" he is once more sure of earth and sea beneath his feet, and the simple fashion in which one of the characters becomes the bearer of ill tidings is a triumph of effective restraint of which any story teller might be proud. Mr. Connolly's Mississippi story seems to prove that he can deal faithfully with other scenes and persons than those of the New England coast. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, $1.35 net.)

THE GREEN ALLEYS, by EDEN PHILLPOTTS, lays its scene in the hop country of Southern Kent, but it has the spirit of the author's recently abandoned Dartmoor region. Mr. Phillpotts did a remarkable thing when he got rid of his home-sickness for Dartmoor in those recent stories "Brunel's Tower," and "Old Delabole." This latest story, like those, has for background the chief occupation of a countryside. It is now the hop gardens of Kent that we have, with their master farmers, their workingmen and women, their innkeepers and other tradesmen, their professional men, everybody but the higher gentry and nobility. As in the Dartmoor stories, Mr. Phillpotts deals lovingly and minutely with character and with scenery, though not so fully with the latter as with inanimate nature in Dartmoor. He calls his new story a "comedy," and such it is in character and situation, though Mr. Phillpotts knows his own limitations too well to attempt humor of phrase other than the simple and homely wit of his common people. Those who have thus far followed Mr. Phillpotts's work with loyalty and enjoyment, though there was a brief transition period when few could have yielded him either, will find that he has kept faith with them in "The Green Alleys," that it is worthy of his best traditions, and one more evidence of an adaptability which for a while one feared he did not possess. He deserves to keep all his old admirers and to win many new ones. (New York: The Macmillan Company, $1.50 net.)

THE MYSTERIOUS STRANGER, MARK TWAIN's posthumous story, shows the author of "HUCKLEBERRY FINN," in the unaccustomed rôle of a romancer. "A Yankee at King Arthur's Court," and "Joan of Arc" might have prepared Mark Twain's admirers for this plunge into romantic fiction, but nobody could have anticipated that he would choose for his scene Austria of the late sixteenth century. He knew Austria of the late nineteenth century, and perhaps upon this knowledge he built this brief but lively romance with its mystery and magic. The publishers

TRAVEL, BIOGRAPHY, HISTORY

A HOOSIER HOLIDAY, by THEODORE DREISER, proves at least one thing, that the manners and point of view of the author have both bettered since he last gave us a book of travel—his discovery of Europe. His discovery of America was because of his friend Franklin Booth's proposal to journey with him in Mr. Booth's automobile, to their common birthplace, the state of Indiana. Mr. Booth undertook to illustrate Mr. Dreiser's report of the land discovered, and he has done it in many charcoal drawings of which the best, usually architectural, show imagination and a sensitiveness to the large, if you will, the sublime in the works of the hands of men. Mr. Dreiser is a philosophical traveler, and now and then a sentimental one. He found that the country and even some of the towns between New York and Indiana, by way of Pennsylvania and Ohio, are beautiful. There were no important adventures, but Mr. Dreiser found much human interest, and he succeeded in transferring it to his pages. There is far too much of the soap-man, as of some other persons, places, and things, but then Mr. Dreiser devoutly believes that nothing less than 500 closely printed royal octavo pages can be called a book. He makes his 500 pages, and few of them are tedious. Mr. Dreiser's philosophy of life is a squalid one, but he holds it sincerely, and it probably harms nobody but himself. His despair of democracy, for which he owns a liking, is characteristic. Perhaps the best hope that Mr. Dreiser may work through his pessimism is the simple unaffected tribute to his mother. Let him nibble away at the problems of life; he takes joy in his present pessimism, and he may yet take greater joy in something better. "A Hoosier Holiday" is live in interest and distinguished in substance, though often slovenly in style. (New York: John Lane Company, $3.00 net.)

THE GOLDEN BOOK OF THE DUTCH NAVIGATORS, by HENDRIK WILLEM VAN LOON, recounts, in a lively and fascinating manner, the adventures of many sixteenth and seventeenth century Dutchmen who sailed the high seas as explorers and commercial travelers. From the delightful preface "for Hansje and Willem" to "the end" on page 333, Professor van Loon never for an instant loses his cheerful and vigorous style, never for a single paragraph permits himself to be dull. Although these voyages were full of significant and exciting incidents and adventures, a man with a less vivid sense of their interest and a less sure selective taste might have made of this a dull book. It is the triumph of Professor van Loon that he knew what to leave out, what to touch lightly, and what to emphasize. The result is a volume likely to please anybody between the ages of nine and ninety. The author has not made a merely entertaining book, however, for he has seen his subject in the large, has related the performances of these extraordinary Dutchmen to the history of the time, and has given the men and their doings their proper place in the story of marine adventure and exploration in the New World and the Orient. The world is indebted to the author for this rescuing of significantly interesting matter from its tomb in the works of the navigators and their contemporaries. The wonder is that the rediscovery of these discoverers was left so late, and fortunately to a master discoverer and narrator. The seventy reproductions of old prints that illustrate the book are quaint and delightful beyond belief. (New York: The Century Co., $2.50 net.)

WE DISCOVER THE OLD DOMINION, by LOUISE CLOSSER HALE, with illustrations in black and white by Walter Hale, repeats the triumph of the same authors last year in their charming book on New England. This time they are a trifle less at home with their country, perhaps more than a trifle less sympathetic with land and people than in the other book. The author's humor however, is still in good working order and the cunning has not deserted the hand of the illustrator, as his more than thirty pictures abundantly prove. The partners approached Virginia by way of Pennsylvania and left it by way of Washington and New Jersey. They unfortunately did not see the Eastern Shore counties of Accomac and Northampton, and they have neglected the Chesapeake and its tributaries. The book deserves a warm welcome from those who love Virginia, and who does not? (New York: Dodd, Mead and Company, $2.50 net.)

PORTRAITS OF WOMEN, by GABRIEL BRADFORD, violates no copyright in exactly translating Sainte Beuve's "Portraits de Femmes", nor is the American a mere imitator of the Frenchman in manner and method. Fortunately for Mr. Bradford, also, no critic will say of him as was said of Sainte Beuve, apropos of his poems which dealt with Madame Hugo, that he left upon her reputation such a trail of glittering slime as a snail leaves in its passage over a rose. There is an enigmatic touch in Mr. Bradford's admirable preface, a touch which some indignant advanced lady may yet ask him to explain. As to the "portraits" they are all of women long dead, and almost equally divided between English women and French women. It must have been solely the author's own fancy which led him to include Mrs. Pepys in this gallery, for one can not guess what she is doing there. He pictures Jane Austen as less attractive than the readers and lovers of her novels would like to think her, and as to Fanny Burney, he calls her prude, but, neglects to call her prig. He has the courage to praise the oft-condemned life of her father. On the whole, he seems to like his French women better than his

English, and certainly Madame de Sévigné, Madame du Deffand, Madame de Choiseul, and Eugénie de Guérin make an interesting and varied group. It is good news that these studies are a preparation for a like volume dealing with American women. Reproductions of contemporary paintings illustrate the volume. (Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin Company, $2.50 net.)

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG

THE GREAT DOT MYSTERY, by CLIFFORD L. SHERMAN, a slim folio in green cloth, brings together twenty-four of those ingenious picture-sheets which have been popular in many newspapers. Each sheet has a trifle of explanatory letterpress at the top, not sufficiently explanatory, however, to unveil the mystery, and a peppering of numbered dots. The game is to connect the dots in numbered order, from one to that bearing the highest number, by lines drawn with a soft pencil. For result the young draftsman has a solution of the "dot mystery" in the form of a more or less elaborate picture. Each page has line drawings which fit in with the picture resulting from the solution of the mystery and thus the whole page is pretty well occupied. There is great variety in subject so that each page is a new surprise. (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company, $1 net.)

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER, Rhymes by R. H. ELKIN, with illustrations by H. Willebeck Le Mair, will be welcomed by all who are familiar with Mr. Le Mair's illustrations for children's books. Mr. Elkin's rhymes are tuneful but unpretentious, the jingling celebration of childish games and adventures. The illustrations are charmingly sympathetic with childhood, and they are delicately tinted. This volume, in the familiar slim oblong format of other such, notably the songs of Schumann with music and with Mr. Le Mair's illustrations, is one of the most attractive of the Christmas publications. (Philadelphia: David McKay, $1.25 net.)

IN THE LAND OF MAKE-BELIEVE, by E. BOYD SMITH, is a new Christmas book by a favorite story teller. The tales deal with games, fairies, and familiar everyday scenes and adventures. Mr. Smith's letterpress is clear, black, and well leaded, and the illustrations, in black and white are entertaining. (New York: Henry Holt and Company, $1.50 net.)

WONDER TALES RETOLD, by KATHARINE PYLE, searches the world for unusual folk stories and gives them in the admirably simple English of a woman who has done much for American childhood. These tales are taken from Slavic folklore, from German, from East Indian, from Korean, from Persian, from the mythology of the American Indian and from the legends of the British peoples; there is even a French Creole story. In all there are eighteen tales. Not only has Miss Pyle clothed these varied legends in her own language and even lent them some of her own fine fancy, but she has illustrated them with eight pictures in color, some of them among the best illustrations that she has ever made. The frontispiece has peculiar charm and much distinction, though it is not better than some of the other illustrations. The volume is bound in green boards with a pictured galleon in black tooling. (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, $1.35 net.)

A NURSERY HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES, by LUCY L. BARBER, tells in about fifty closely printed pages some of the chief events in our history from the discovery of America to the present time. Events are chosen for their importance, their picturesqueness, and their sensational character. With catholic impartiality, the author praises Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Lee, Grant, and Roosevelt. Pacifist parents may object to the frequent sound of drum and trumpet in these little historical sketches, but the arts and triumphs of peace are also celebrated. The style is not distinguished, but neither is it pompous, and it is within the comprehension of young folks. (New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company, $2 net.)

THE JOLLY BOOK OF PLAY-CRAFT, by PATTEN BEARD, tells children how to make for themselves the utensils of many entertaining and instructive games. Cardboard, buttons, spools, pebbles, twigs, pins, time-table maps, illustrated trade catalogues, and other cheap and familiar materials go to the making of the utensils, and the tools employed are ruler, pencil, scissors, and colored crayons. In an age when the manufacture of elaborate and costly toys threatens to make the children of the well-to-do blasé little beings, this book should serve a useful purpose. (New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company, $1.35 net.)

Under the colored wrappings are concealed the following books: "Burning and Melting," a Hindu poem of love, in a red India silk binding, illustrated, $2.50; "Arts and Crafts of India and Ceylon," 250 illustrations; $1.75; "The Wonder Book of Ships," illustrated, $1.50; "Alice in Wonderland," $1.50 or $6, both editions with the Tenniel pictures. The unique wrappings are extra; $1 for those with the cut out paper patterns; 50 cents for the others

A NECKLACE OF TECLA PEARLS

In the first place: Tecla Pearls are the one ornament of feminine beauty which are not circumscribed in use, for it is in strict keeping with propriety and taste to wear them day and evening, at the thé dansant, at dinner, and at the play.

In the second place: All women of refinement wear pearls, not alone because it is a social custom, but because pearls, unlike other gems, do not conflict with any type of beauty, but blend perfectly with the flesh tones of brunette or blonde.

In the third place: Tecla Pearls are indistinguishable copies of the Oriental specimens, identical in coloring and in orient, and worn for their impeccable resemblance to deep sea pearls, by the social leaders of two continents.

In the fourth place, She wants them, and no argument of yours or of ours can take precedence over that!

What is Christmas without a wooden French turkey? And a few wooden fowls? A French doll-chef must cook them, for the French can make even wooden fowls palatable when cooked, you know

The FRIENDLY FRENCH TOY

TO help the world by playing—it doesn't sound likely, does it? Yet we all know that a smile with a penny is worth more than a penny and no smile. The lisping four-year-old American who smilingly stretches a determined hand toward a wonderful French toy elephant is unconsciously sending a thrill straight down to the heart of a crippled French soldier some thousands of miles away or perhaps feeding by proxy some other baby and its mother, some French baby who is fatherless.

Once our toys were German toys, as a matter of course; we had only an occasional marvel in the shape of a French doll, when father's stocks went up. The war of course has dislocated the German toy industry, and for two years there has been a world-famine in toys; now there is a transplanted French toyland, or rather fairy-land, where are beasts of every kind that Adam named and some since invented; absorbing barnyards that suggest hours-to-come of careful landscape gardening; paddocks with all modern improvements; and alas (though the boys will love them) battlefields; all of them, grotesque, realistic, quaint, or all three, the work of patient and clever French fingers.

THE CLANS OF TOYLAND

Those who remember having long ago a few foreign toys with their funny little foreign air, will know how modern children are going to look back on their French toys, bought in the days of the war.

They hop. At least we are sure they would hop under just the right psychic treatment

This gathering of the clans of Toyland takes place at 406 Madison Avenue, near 47th Street under the auspices of the French Bureau. Orders are also taken at this shop for grown ups' articles,—blouses, trousseaux, and dainty favors and place cards,—as well as for layettes and children's clothes of all descriptions; everything exhibited and sold is the handiwork of the French war sufferers.

What is the French Bureau? It is the American branch of La Vie Féminine, a society organized in 1914 just before the war broke out, by Mademoiselle Valentine Thompson; its object was to help toward their own self-support women who were ill, needy, deserted, or widowed; and at the outbreak of the war it helped hundreds of women to employment in taking charge of homeless French and Belgian refugee babies, and under its guidance training schools for women have been established. After the war, the need will be even greater than it is now, and La Vie Féminine, with all the help that America can give it, will continue to supply that need.

SPONSORS IN AMERICA

The officers of the New York French Bureau are Madame Charles Le Verrier, President; Mrs. Daniel Gregory Mason, Manager. The advisory board includes Mrs. William Astor Chanler, Mrs. William Adams Delano, Mrs. William Greenough, Madame Kozminski, Mrs. Victor Morawetz, Mrs. Edith Parsons Morgan, and Miss Gertrude Watson.

Will the cat get one? We hope she doesn't, because we want them all, all three, to take to bed with us every night for weeks and weeks no matter how nubby they are, till all the legs and ears are broken off. We'd tie up that cat if it belonged to us

Woman-

No wonder you're tired. No wonder you're blue. No wonder you're fretful. The incessant din of the kiddies, the worry of household responsibilities, the wear of social obligations, the strain of shopping, day in and day out are beginning to tell. No wonder the frown, the headaches, the pessimism.

If you could but meet yourself face to face, you'd realize it was time to call a halt. What milady needs is real rest for the tired body tissue, a genuine tuning up of the shattered nerves, a change of environment, a new perspective.

You were created to be well —you were born to be strong and happy. The way to the sunny side of the street is not difficult—it is best described and pictured in.

153 East 24th Street - New York

THERE are certain masculine epicures who affirm stoutly that it is indeed a rare woman who can enter a restaurant and order a dinner that is fit to eat. Indeed, one man goes so far as to say that no woman can order a dinner properly, thereby stamping himself a cynic of the deepest dye. But one might think him not far from right at times, to hear a group of women ordering a repast in a restaurant or hotel. For hesitation and frequent change of mind are the rule, while the waiter tries his best to assume a patient air and to smile heroically.

There are, of course, shining exceptions. Every head waiter of any prominence in New York knows a dashing young matron from San Francisco who makes annual pilgrimages to New York for the horse show and opera season. From the time of her arrival until she boards the train for the coast, they will leave every one to serve her, when she enters the restaurant at the Ritz or the Vanderbilt, the Plaza or Sherry's. They fly to see that her duck is cooked just the twelve minutes she specifies and that her Burgundy is of exactly the correct temperature. The attention and service she receives are worth a bit of study. She knows exactly what she wants. There is no indecision, no hesitation, and she has an almost uncanny gift for assembling exactly the right dishes with proper food values; in fact, her bosom friend whispers that she has included domestic science in her curriculum at Leland Stanford.

WELL-CHOSEN MENUS

Speaking of well-chosen menus, some of the late dinners in the Rose Room of the Plaza bespeak careful consideration upon the part of the hostess and of the maitre d'hôtel, who would never permit madame to make a gastronomic faux pas, as he hovers over her with tactful suggestions. The following menus are good examples. The first dinner was given to a Japanese marchioness who was passing through New York on her way to London. The wines chosen were Château Mouton Rothschild, Grand Vin 1893, Mumm's Cordon Rouge 1906, and the inevitable White Rock for those on the "Eat and Grow Thin" diet.

Casaba Melon
Potage Boula
Céleri Olives Mures et Vertes Noix Salées
Filet de Bar de Mer, Bonne Femme Zahire
Mignonnettes d'Agneau de Lait, Eastwick
Asperges Délices
Salade Kuroki
Fromage
Mousse Julia
Petits Fours Friandises
Marrons Glacées Bon Bons
Café

Another menu for a formal dinner was worded in English on a gold-printed menu card which appeared with the favors at each plate. The use of French is a matter of taste on menu cards, but most hostesses of to-day prefer to give the menu in French, thinking that it imparts a mysteriously delectable air to the array of dishes. The more simple the menu card, the more dignity it lends to the table, and oblong gold-edged white cards with rounded corners, printed in either black or gold, are most favored. The personal crest of the host, or simply his monogram or initials in old English letters, may head the card, and at the lower right-hand corner appears the name of the hotel, restaurant, or country house, together with the date. The menu for this second dinner is given here:

Coupes Surprises
Consommé Beatrice
Tiny Hearts of Celery
Ripe and Green Olives
Salted Nuts
Filets of Kingfish, Meunière
Potatoes Parisienne
Broiled Sweetbreads
Fresh Mushrooms Creamed Peas
Sherbert Nénuphar
Boneless Squab, Florence
Salade des Mariés
Bombe Nuptiale
Petits Fours
Bon Bons Mottos
Coffee
Haut Sauterne and Roederer Carte Blanche were the wines used with this dinner. A rather more elaborate dinner follows:
Suprême de Pamplemousse
Petite Marmite
Céleri Noix Salées Olives
Filet de Bar de Mer Bonne Femme
Mignon de Filet de Bœuf Colbert
Haricots Verts au Beurre Pommes Gaufrette
Asperges Nouvelles, Hollandaise
Sorbets Loving Cup
Pigeonneau Farci à l'Américaine
Salade Ninon
Pêches Précieuses
Petits Fours
Bon Bons
Café

The pêche précieuse mentioned in the foregoing menu is a delicious new sweet created by Nestor Lattard. Banana ice cream, flavored with a souppçon of Holland gin to bring out the flavor, is moulded in the form of a peach around some red currant bar le duc jelly, colored slightly pink, and served in a glass dish, garnished with one leaf. Guinea hen Rostand is another delicious dish served recently at smart dinners. The stuffing is made in the usual way with bread crumbs, a little highly seasoned sausage meat, and diced eggplant and banana in equal parts, not forgetting thyme, the dominant herb in this dressing. A mire poix of sliced oranges and diced pineapple should be made, and with a bit of their own juice spread over the bottom of the roasting pan where they may impart their flavor to the bird in the roasting process. It should be served with bread sauce, browned bread crumbs, and guava, or currant and raspberry jelly.

Saddle of lamb Narcisse is another triumph of Lattard. The saddle of lamb should be roasted to a turn, and when ready to serve it should be carved on the bone, without completely severing the slices, and placed on a silver platter, that it may be easily served at table. Around the saddle of lamb are placed some boiled sweet potatoes scooped out in large round balls with a vegetable scoop. They should be sprinkled lightly with melted butter, dusted over with brown sugar, and then at the last moment before they are served, brandy is poured over them and lighted.

Crab meat Philip is a change from the hackneyed canapé Lorenzo or crab meat Newburg. Large cucumbers are cut in half lengthwise, their seeds are removed, and they are parboiled until tender. Then they are drained, seasoned, filled with crab meat and glazed with Remick, rémoulade, or mayonnaise sauce, and served either hot or cold, with brown bread sandwiches.

out a play of manners. Mock bohemianism—how I have reviled it!—has quite gone out. No more queer bunchy frocks exploding into sudden embroidery designed to express the wearer's soul. No more studio teas. No more slumming parties exploring spaghetti in villainous Italian table d'hôtes. One daring explorer has discovered a new Greenwich Village on the upper West Side. Figure that to yourself! It is as when the students of the Boul' Mich' and the Latin Quarter of Paris first transferred their affections to Montmartre. Jefferson Market and South Fifth Avenue have returned to their birthright of the commonplace, and aggressively clean cafeterias are springing up where once flourished dirty and doubtful cabarets.

Although "fed up" on war, we seem to want more and more of it. Shaw and his following, are quite in the potage as we used to say in school-boy days. Everything is war, and more war. If some one would only give a tank party, how grateful we would be. I do not know precisely how it could be done, but there ought to be a way of utilizing the once harmless vehicle, now suddenly made an instrument of war. I suppose I shall bring down the wrath of pacifists upon my devoted head, but I could not resist the promptings of the spirit of the age, and I am giving all my young friends warlike toys—even little submarines to engage in deadly work in the placid waters of the bathtub.

DRAMATIC CAMELS

I fear New York has lost its keen discrimination in matters dramatic. Now and then a "mushy" play succeeds. Still I suppose there must be some place where we can take the unsophisticated young person—if such a being exists. So we have dramatic caramels like "Pollyanna." We are tired of criminals and stolen jewels and trials and triangles. The brand of musical comedy has been silly beyond words, but we cling to the revue and the spectacle. Caruso is with us again and society is on exhibition at the Metropolitan, and this twofold attraction draws the largest crowds.

What am I to say of Christmas? What can be said that has not already been said? There are no more Christmas stories to tell. Christmas numbers of magazines are even as Christmas cards and Christmas calendars. The only ones we care for are those which are useful and which tell us what to buy and how to keep our Yuletide festivities. The gifts have all been selected and ordered, and the shops will send them out to arrive the day before Christmas.

GETTING THROUGH CHRISTMAS

In New York, certain families still maintain the old custom of relatives going from house to house—now in limousines instead of broughams and victorias—and leaving their gifts. The girls and boys are home from school and college, and these last two weeks must be devoted to them. As of old, I shall pass the Christmas in the country, where at my place I will have a few friends on the day itself, celebrating as I always have done. There will be a dance at the Hunt Club, one evening, and then we will come and go as the spirit moves us. There will be the usual celebration, also (this sounds like the announcements made from the pulpits for the servants) a little punch or egg-nog at Uncle George's—he insists on this antiquated custom—and a tree for the many youngsters of the neighborhood. After that there are dances in town, a ball for the coming-out of the daughter of a friend, an evening at the opera—Caruso of course—and one at the play. I do not care to go but can not get out of it.

Then plans for the southern trip, after the gaieties of the town lose their savor and their tang. One day is much like another. Here is the last page of the last chapter of this book, and the word Finis stares at me from the bottom line. I shut the covers and put 1916 on the shelf in the company of its fellows of the years which have passed. The ceremony is over. I offer my usual and best wishes—I will not repeat the formula—you know it. It is written everywhere and so far it has been our proud heritage. "Peace and good will to men"—A Merry Christmas! Here is old Meadows with silvered hair, like Santa Claus himself, a modern one without whiskers. He brings me a package with the afternoon mail. It is a new volume. I shall wait until the first of the year to open it.

Greater Beauty—Greater Dependability

Nothing like an electric!
Nothing can take its place!

Its convenience, its smartness, its cleanliness, its fitness for either winter or summer use, make it the indispensable car.

And it's no trouble to decide which electric to buy.

Of course you want a modern light low car.

The Milburn was the first light electric—it's the time tried light electric with no hint of experiment.

It's the only light electric which is modern and stylish in appearance.

Artistically and mechanically it surpasses easily all the old fashioned high electrics which have been experimentally lightened and lowered in price to meet Milburn competition.

And it is still the lowest priced electric—a roomier, lighter, more beautiful car without hint or suggestion of experiment—time-tried and proven—for $1685.

MAKERS OF MUSIC

the patriotic soldier on the march needs most of all to be diverted and cheered. Certainly the soldier's songs reveal the soldier's soul as no post-bellum anecdote ever can. "I have studied thousands of folk-songs," said old Herr Grimm, "and I have never found in them a single lie." If the people do not sing readily about the glory of battle, it is perhaps because, in spite of all which is said about the biological need for war, the people's heart is not in it. It is a notable fact that most of the war songs of the world, praising battle as a glorious thing, are written by individuals; many of them, like old Charles Dibdin, actually in the pay of the government for which they wrote. Mr. Hamilton did not mention the one notable exception in French history, the songs of the French Revolution. Here, at least, was a glorious war, a war of and for the people. And the people, for this one time, rose up and called war glorious in such spontaneous songs as "La Carmagnole," "Ça Ira," and "La Marseillaise."

SINGERS OF FOLK-MUSIC

Digressions such as this creep into any discussion of folk-music. For the literature of the people, like all great literature, effaces itself in its splendid mirroring of life. Particularly is this true of the English folk-songs, which the Fuller Sisters sing most admirably. These songs, nearly all of them discovered within the last fifteen years by Mr. Cecil Sharp, smell delightfully of the out-of-doors. They are utterly free from pose and self-consciousness. Their art is that of unaffected truthfulness. And the Fuller Sisters, who are perfect artists, reflect in their singing the genius of the songs. In all music, there is nothing more jolly than these old English ballads, and there is nothing more jolly on the concert stage than the Fuller Sisters. In their perfect artlessness, they are perfect artists.

Those who love folk-songs found one of the most interesting recitals of the season in that given by Loraine Wyman, when she sang for the first time the ballads she collected last summer with Mr. Howard Brockway among the Kentucky mountains. Newspapers and railroads are sworn enemies of folk-music, but these "poor whites," living still under frontier conditions, have preserved intact the songs of their English and Scotch ancestors. They have even, in some instances, added a bit of an American flavor to them. Miss Wyman, who in past seasons has sung French chansons with flawless taste and nuance, adopts for these Anglo-Saxon songs a hearty and objective style. She possesses a voice which, though small, has been trained to a notable degree of beauty and flexibility. In all her work she has that fine Gallic quality, the artistry which conceals itself. Being so peculiarly French in her workmanship, she surprised her hearers by singing in a true Anglo-Saxon spirit these lively and beautiful songs.

It is a little depressing to turn from such fresh and simple music to the bombastic tone-poem which Richard Strauss has written concerning the Alps, and which had its first New York performance not long ago at the opening of the Philharmonic season. This "Alpine Symphony" is a detailed and tedious description in music of a day of Alpine climbing. There are at least twenty episodes and pictures, and the composer notes them faithfully on the program in such a manner that he who runs may read, and he who reads will run. There are a sunrise, a glacier, a waterfall, a thicket, and much more, including a pleasant mead with cows and cow-bells in it, and the most preposterous thunderstorm which modern program-music has given us.

NEW SOPRANOS

Concerts have been many, for the New York musical season is, if possible, a busier one than ever before. The reviewer notes, however, one new singer of splendid abilities, Martha Phillips, a Swedish coloratura soprano. Her voice is in spots a thing of the rarest beauty, and her vocal agility is well up to the coloratura standard. But some nameless teacher must answer for his sins in leaving his work with this remarkable voice unfinished; the registers are not blended, the pitch is none too certain. Mrs. Phillips shows the persisting influence of the teacher, too in her programs, which are conventional and a bit confusing.

Another coloratura soprano who has recently made her debut in this country is Mme. Galli-Curci. This latest particular bright star of the Chicago Opera Company is an artist of many rare gifts. Although she has made her reputation as a coloratura singer, her voice is one of great richness and power. As an actress she shows great dramatic talent and it is safe to say she will be ranked as one of the foremost singers of her day. She has sung in Spain, Italy, Cuba, and South America, always with great success, but has never before been heard here.

Mme. Galli-Curci is not only a singer but an exceedingly fine musician. In appearance she reminds one of Anna Pavlova, having the same spiritual face with the same feeling for the deeper and higher things. There is little doubt that her art will place her preeminently among the favorites of the footlights.

It is rumored that the Metropolitan Opera House will secure her services for the season 1918, thus giving New York the opportunity to hear a new singer in the rôles made famous by such artists as Patti and Sembrich.

Next to the human voice there is no musical instrument so much abused as the 'cello. So it is pleasant to record that there is one young 'cellist on the concert stage whose technique is virtually perfect. It is a little disconcerting to see a lady at one of the "big fiddles," as Mr. Percy Grainger calls them, but when one has heard for a moment the tones which Miss Beatrice Harrison draws from her 'cello, all the incongruity vanishes. Her bowing is a delight, and her phrasing, a rare thing among players of stringed instruments, is intelligent and restful. Except only for Casals, who has downright greatness, we have no better 'cellist than Miss Harrison.

A little more masculine are the virtues of Mme. Olga Samaroff. It is chiefly a fine sense of proportion which distinguishes her technique and her interpretations. Her readings are a bit dry, perhaps, but to the critical ear they are delightful. There is charm in her phrasing and sprightliness in her execution. But her playing of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's trifling "Elegie," dedicated to her, dislocated her whole program, showing what an embarrassing thing it is to be honored by a composer.

An admirable program of a traditional type was recently played by Mr. John Powell. It was made up of works of "the three great B's" of music—Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms—including such difficult pieces as the "Sonata Appassionata" and the "Variations on a Theme by Handel." But Mr. Powell's intent was better than his performance. Such a program taxes all the nervous force and endurance of a pianist, and in this case the pianist was physically not equal to the strain. It is quite possible that a "good program" may be a bad one, if it is not suited to the abilities of the performer. It is a pity if Mr. Powell is to prejudice his fine ability in sensuous emotional interpretation because of too much ambition.

"I Enjoy Using the Arden Venetian Preparations"

Mrs. "B.", just returned from her country place in the hills, spoke with glowing enthusiasm while chatting with Miss Arden at the Salon D'Oro.

"My complexion is wonderful, and I give all the credit to your precious preparations. And the wonderful convenience of your Beauty Box! Everything in it so fit and orderly and ready-to-hand—then afterwards, just closing down the cover, conceals all evidences of one's toilet secrets; besides it is so easy and safe in traveling—no spilled liquids or powders to deface one's trunk or bag.

"It all seems so wonderful after looking such a fright, as I did when I first came to you last Spring. Those horrible lines in front of my ears, especially, were a constant nightmare to me. When several of your Muscle Strapping Treatments made them disappear completely, I resolved never again to tolerate another line or wrinkle.

"All my friends are using your preparations, and agree with me that your splendid special methods in enhancing and preserving beauty, combine to make the most wonderful gift to woman of this progressive age—and I'll sing your praises so long as my complexion is as fine and glowing as it now is."

"That will be so long as you continue to use my preparations in the way I prescribe and teach," replied Miss Arden.

And Mrs. "B" DID Look Radiant

Her complexion had that warm, soft glow which is seen only when the muscles and tissues under the skin are firm and resilient, the facial circulation "live." Such a condition is possible to maintain when the first signs of danger are always heeded, and the Arden Preparations are at hand. For the faintest blemish becomes pronounced if not attended to promptly, and no treatment is effective without efficient preparations.

fourth marked the formal beginning of the New York art season with the opening of the combined exhibitions of the New York Water Color Club and the National Association of Portrait Painters, in the Fine Arts Building. One wonders whether the New York Water Color Club has never heard that excellent French proverb, "Qui s'excuse, s'accuse," that they print in their catalogue quotations which include the following: "I have disliked pictures so much that I afterwards found were good that I want to hint to you that you may, some day, want an outlet from the opinions you now hold," and this: "And the artist even if he does not amuse the public, amuses himself; so that there will always be one man the happier for his vigils."

Though it chattered, the exhibition of the (Continued on page 108)

New York Water Color Club did so merrily in fresh and brilliant color, in every treatment of the medium, from the flat wash, through gouache and pastel to attempts in clear paint to simulate work in oils, and in every turn of mind, from the gay to that which is overwhelmed with its own seriousness. There were paintings originating in the desire to wield the brush, be the result what it may, and there were also thoroughly decorative pieces handled with considerable skill and success. The exhibition held a profusion of small water colors, five hundred and one in all, and miniatures and small pieces of sculpture.

There was no one painting which stood out vividly in the galleries, though many seen in a smaller exhibition, where there was less confusion of color and composition, would have claimed attention. A painting small in size though broad in feeling, "On the Marne," by George Luks, won the new Ludnut prize of one hundred dollars as the most meritorious water color in the exhibition. It was a patriotic little painting of blue sea with red and white small figures on a wharf and seemed to have taken its color cue direct from the French flag floating above.

The exhibition had a larger proportion than usual of pieces treated in a decorative manner. Among these was "The Flower Market," by Kate Mann Franklin. This work represented balustraded steps leading from an upper square with a church and two clock towers down to a flower market, gay under gray and black striped umbrellas which shielded the only bits of brilliant color, the vermilion and yellow and flecks of blue which portrayed flowers and flower woman. "Old Brick Walk, Prospect Park," by Mary Langtry, was a study of pattern in walk and shrubbery and water.

Thornton Oakley contributed a number of works which had taken their inspiration from the east. These included "The Fakir," with long streaming hair, sitting aloft cross-legged before his baubles, "Rajputana," and "The Guard of the Maharajah," a Bakst blue background for a figure in white and reds, distinctly and definitely drawn. Another eastern subject was "The Secret Garden," by Edith M. Magonigle, which reminded one of the lotus pool in Bain's "Digit of the Moon" and the little chéti telling her daily stories to the king.

Of the numerous flower pieces, two deserve special mention,—"Petunias" by Mary Van der Veer,—done in thin wash with a most delicately delightful variation of texture and color, happy in its contrast of delicate flower against a mirror background,—and "Magnolia Flowers," by Elisabeth Kendall. Felicie Waldo Howell showed a number of characteristic scenes including "Independence Hall." By Louise B. Mansfield was "The Culpit," a breezy bit done freely and with a touch of humor. There was a happy example of Hilda Belcher's recent work in "Comfort," a child in her pillows.

which dominated the wall on which it hung and stood out conspicuously in the exhibition as the work of a man who knew what he aimed to express and how to do it. In this portrait, black chalk in line and small mass on neutral paper, suggest the gown, while the flesh tones of face and hand give the only real color. Though sketchy and often only suggested, the work is, in its portrait quality, worthy of a place in the exhibition of Portrait Painters and might have moved into the Vanderbilt Gallery next it, without disturbing the equilibrium of that sane and able collection.

The Exhibition of the National Association of Portrait Painters was small and well hung, giving a sense of space and relief from the profusion of brilliant colors and many compositions of the Water Color Club exhibition. The place of honor was given to the work of Thomas Eakins, whose "Portrait of an Artist" was the most thoroughly serious work in the exhibition. While it is reminiscent of Whistler in the use of a misty background with the figure melting into it and the whole enveloped in misty brownness, it is distinctly a portrait, with a careful study of the individuality of the artist.

PORTRAITS OLD AND NEW

A number of old friends reappeared in this exhibition, including Robert Vornoh's well-known portrait of Daniel Chester French in his studio. There was a typical work by Jean McLane, the portrait of Master Alfred G. Vanderbilt, while John C. Johansen showed a characteristic work, the "Portrait of Miss Margaret Clarke," which aimed at effect by speedy methods.

One of the most interesting canvases was the fine bold work of Leopold Seyffert, "Francisco." It might almost be the work of an American Zuloaga, this very Spanish portrait of the keen, alert, pirate type of Spaniard. The subject has been arrested for a moment in swift movement and stops with something of impatience and no little scorn for his portrait. Low in key and toned in gray, it is full of the vivacity and alertness—even to the slight tipping backward—that is so characteristic of the Spanish school. It is a clear cut definitely drawn figure, touching the frame on every side from the tip of the pointed hat down. The first impression of the dull grayness of tanned skin and dark costume against a gray cloud sky, gives place to a feeling that the work is nevertheless full of color. The dull dark kerchief about the neck is, none the less, green, and small touches of vermillion and yellow appear in the waistcoat, and blue of the sky breaks through the clouds. It is a portrait which has been keenly seen and as keenly and frankly portrayed.

Of a very different and more conventional type is the interesting portrait of Michael Steiner, by Victor D. Hecht. This work portrays only the head and shoulders and lays all the emphasis on the individuality in the face. It is far superior to the characterless, smooth, brown "Portrait," by the same artist.

Lydia Field Emmet leaves for a moment the painting of children to paint the "Portrait of a Lady." It is a portrait with a delicate refinement of drawing and a clearness of color, and it suggests a porcelain in the violet blues and soft rose of gown and flowers, which are relieved by the clear note of bright blue green of the chair.

Nothing could be in greater contrast than the work directly across the gallery, from this portrait, a work by Robert Henri, the portrait of Diego Roybal (Po-Tse-Nu-Tsa). It is bold and frank, and, while the upper portion is done with more care and success than the somewhat startlingly white feet, it is interesting, if it is noisy even without the use of the drum.

It seems unfortunate that at this time William M. Chase might not have been better represented than in his portrait of Mr. Frederick A. Guild, but doubtless time will bring a fairer view of the work of this eminent American painter in a Chase memorial exhibition. Ellen Emmet Rand's very modern "Penelope" in an orange vermillion sweater, set before a labored curtain of flower design and beside a baby under a turquoise blue blanket, makes one feel a bit that it is a case of each color for itself with no echoes to harmonize them in the composition. The work lacks in imagination as it gains in representation, though it does not belong in the class of prose narration of the portrait of "Miss Owings" by Helen M. Turner or drop to the class of prettiness with Douglas Volk's "Miss Ellen Barker." George Bellow's "Laura" with the china blue eyes is (may we say it?) modernist with glimpses of reason in spite of its cubist curtain and unpleasing color. Irving R. Wiles was represented by two pictures; a "Portrait in Profile" of a woman seated, though pleasing, was not Mr. Wiles at his best; the second, a self-portrait, was full of life and keen perception. Much less alive was the somewhat dry portrait of George Barr McCutcheon, by William Cotton. The face in this portrait is strongly drawn, with a sense of solidity and true values, but the treatment of the rest of the picture as setting for the face is uninteresting.

ARTISTS' MISTAKES AND SUCCESSES

The only work in the exhibition which contained more than one portrait was the painting of "The Hon. Mrs. Beresford (Kitty Gordon) and her daughter, Miss Vera Beresford," by S. Montgomery Roosevelt. It is somewhat chalky in color and has deep gray shadows, but it is superior in color and modeling to this artist's "Portrait of Mrs. Nathaniel J. Hess," in which the unpleasant red of a gauzy drapery over the arm gives a most distressing hue to the arm beneath.

Modernism was reduced to reason at the Portrait Painters' exhibition, in George Luks clever portrait of Jan Matulka, caught apparently in full flight across the canvas

Many Who Came to Mme. Rubinstein Were Skeptical

They thought it impossible for anyone to work the complexion wonders that this European Specialiste claimed as part of her wonder-work.

For they judged Mme. Rubinstein's ability by their experience at the hands of so-called "Beauty Doctors," who not only had failed utterly to bring back fading beauty, but had even left additional blemishes—a wrinkled neck, or loose, baggy cheeks—additional lines and wrinkles about the eyes.

These ladies were skeptical—no wonder they could not believe or conceive that there had come at last a Complexion Specialiste,—a Scientist, who not only could preserve and heighten Beauty, but who even made Beauty Blossom forth where only unattraction reigned.

FOR NEVER BEFORE HAS THERE EVER BEEN ANY ONE LIKE MME. RUBINSTEIN

Never before had a beauty specialiste accomplished scientifically such wonders as proved by the unqualified endorsements of Mme. Rubinstein and her methods, showered upon her by Royalty abroad—by beautiful women of society and the stage.

If you, too, have doubted—doubt no longer. Write or call and let Mme. Rubinstein personally prove to you her ability and understanding of the complexion. Let her show you how wrinkles, crowsfeet, can be made to vanish—how a muddy, blotchy complexion can be cleared—how true loveliness can be brought out and retained in spite of advancing years.

For your convenience Mme. Rubinstein has listed below some of her own preparations and their uses for home treatment.

VALAZE BEAUTIFYING SKIN FOOD

Restores, stimulates and preserves the skin, wards off wrinkles, looseness and flabbiness. It promotes the renewal of skin-cells, and thus stands for skin-health and youthfulness. VALAZE clears the skin of tan, freckles and sallowness, and thus makes the complexion fine and faultless. VALAZE has been used for years by the best-known women of aristocratic and royal circles in Europe. Just as a good complexion is the foundation of real beauty, VALAZE is undeniably the foundation of a good complexion. VALAZE may be had direct from Madame Rubinstein at $1.00, $2.00 and $6.00 a jar.

VALAZE SKIN TONING LOTION
To obtain better and more rapid results this companion preparation to Valaze should be used with it. For a dry skin, the "Special" is used. Price, $2.00 and $4.00.

For a greasy or a normal skin, the ordinary at $1.25, $2.25 and $5.00 a bottle.

VALAZE BLACK HEAD AND OPEN PORE PASTE

Refines coarse skin texture, removes greasiness, blackheads, and reduces enlarged pores. Used in place of soap. Price, $1.00, $2.00 and $5.00.

VALAZE LIQUIDINE
Overcomes greasiness and "shine" of the skin, and undue flushing of nose and face. Gives a cool, fair and mat appearance to the complexion. Helps to overcome open pores and blackheads. Price, $1.50, $2.75 and $5.50 a bottle.

VALAZE ROMAN JELLY
This is a new astringent balm which consolidates and makes firm loose and flabby tissue. The tightening and smoothing out of the skin about the mouth and eyes and under the chin which it accomplishes is really wonderful. Price, $1.50 and $3.00 a bottle.

VALAZE BEAUTY GRAINS
This is the latest specialty for the hygienic beautifying of the face and hands—by WASHING. Washing the face with Valaze Beauty Grains keeps the skin charmingly pure and alabaster-like in its transparency. Improves the skin's texture, and preserves its velvety touch. It does away with greasiness of the skin, and prevents pores becoming enlarged. Price, $1.00 and $2.00.

USE AND CHOICE OF FACE POWDERS

VALAZE COMPLEXION POWDER, in five tints, flesh, rose, cream, rachel and white, for greasy moist skins, also for normal skins. NOVENA POUDE, in five tints, for dry skins. Price, $1.00, $2.50 and $4.50 a box.

VALAZE VEIN LOTION
Nearly every woman when examining her face will find on it small, wavy red lines, especially on the sides of the nose and on the cheeks, caused by broken and congested veins, noticeable with the cold weather. VALAZE VEIN LOTION is the only preparation known in the world used in such instances. Price, $3.00, $5.00 and $10.00.

VALAZE COMPRESSED POWDER
Its lightness is so extraordinary that one could speak of it as "essence of powder." Owing to its extreme fineness, it cannot cake up nor form unbearing incrustations on face and neck. It is supplied in a small dainty gold case with small glass, miniature powder puff, and there can be no spilling. The carton in addition contains two reserve blocks of powder, to replace the one in the gold box when used. Powders deliciously scented and the complete outfit costs only $1.50; $6.50 Special (In all shades).

FOR DOUBLE CHIN
VALAZE REDUCING JELLY (price, $1.50 and $3.00) also the VALAZE REDUCING SOAP (price, $1.25 a cake) are the two most effective preparations to remove a double chin as well as superfluous fat, and to restore beauty of line to face and throat.

VALAZE CRUSHED ROSE LEAVES
A delightful colouring for the face in the novel form of powder or compressed blocks. Reproduces natural tints to perfection and does not betray even the slightest trace of artificiality. State whether required in block or powder, for blonde or brunette. Price, 75c and $3.00.

A copy of Madame Rubinstein's booklet, "Beauty in the Making," will be sent on receipt of 2c stamp to cover postage.

Mlle. Lola Beekman—formerly with Mme. Rubinstein in Paris and New York is now her Chicago Representative, at 30 Michigan Avenue, Michigan Boulevard Bldg. Mme. Rubinstein's many Chicago clients now have the convenience of obtaining the Valaze preparations direct from Mlle. Beekman.

San Francisco: Miss Ida Martin, 177 Post St. and Grant Ave.
Philadelphia: Mme. Rose Schachman, 2536 W. Somerset St.
New Orleans: Mrs. C. V. Butler, 8017 Zimble St.

Barlow, and the other able members of the company, he has earned the most emphatic praise for an artistic achievement of quite uncommon loveliness. Here is a play that nobody who loves life can afford to miss; and such plays are not written very often. If Ibsen's little Hilda should see a play like this, she would hear once more the mystic music of harps in the air, and see a tower high, high up, and a wreath of flowers round it, and over it a sky of many stars.

"GOOD GRACIOUS ANNABELLE"

If a complete scenario of "Good Gracious Annabelle," by Clare Kummer, had been submitted to the present critic, he would have told the author that she had no play and would have advised her not to waste her time in writing out the dialogue. Yet the piece, as written and presented, is distinctly entertaining. The lines are exceptionally bright and merry, the characters are adequately sketched and admirably acted, and the play is staged with spirit and with taste.

A careful thinking-over of the text must lead to the opinion that there is not a single undeniably dramatic situation in the entire pattern, that the narrative is episodic and lacking in construction, that the material is trivial, that the author does not even know enough about the craft of making plays to motivate the entrances and exits of her characters, and that—to sum the matter up—"Good Gracious Annabelle" is about as bad a play as one could see. And yet—in contravention of this logic—the simple fact remains that the experience of seeing it is more than usually jolly.

Much of this effect may be accredited to the unconventional and very able stage-direction of Mr. Arthur Hopkins. The pleasure of the evening has also been enhanced appreciably by the very simple and very lovely settings designed by Mr. Robert Edmond Jones. Mr. Jones has a happy faculty of transmitting whatever he touches—even lightly—into art. Whenever art appears in public, it affords us an occasion for taking off our hat; and—simple child of nature that we are—we always feel more comfortable when our hat is in the hand than when our hat is on the head. But, then again, there is the dialogue to be considered. Mrs. Kummer writes as some women talk,—the sort of women that one goes a second time to see; and good dialogue, after all, is of great assistance to the kind of play that could not get along without it.

"THE BASKER"

It takes a long time to plan and write a play; and, to win sufficient leisure for these tasks, it is necessary to oppose a "great refusal" to many instant beckonings of life. It becomes, in consequence, a theme for wonderment how Mr. Clifford Mills (whoever he may be) could possibly have thought it worth his while to write "The Basker."

"The Basker" is a very thin play. The hero is a British gentleman of leisure whose only purposes in life are, first, to be always happy, and, second, to keep everybody else as happy as can be, in order that his own serenity may never be disturbed. The crisis of his life occurs when, through a failing in the main line of succession, he inherits unexpectedly an important dukedom. He does not want to be a duke, for noblesse oblige, and eminence imposes obligations: so he makes a deal with a distant cousin, by the terms of which this ambitious relative agrees to take the property off his hands and to marry an eligible girl into the bargain.

The basker is aroused from his irresponsibility when he suddenly discovers that his ambitious cousin is a blackguard,—caring nothing for the girl to whom he is affianced, but intending only to get his hands on the estate in order to squander the income on a married woman with whom he is entangled. Thereupon the loitering hero sloughs his laziness and finally becomes a man. He accepts the dukedom which he has inherited, and marries the girl that, in his days of dallying, he had intended to surrender to his cousin.

The trouble with this story is that it deals with the trivial concerns of people who are trivial, so that the telling of the tale seems unworthy of attention from an adult mind. Some authors are very lucky. Mr. Clifford Mills (whoever he may be) has enjoyed the great good fortune of having this utterly unimportant play produced in London by Sir George Alexander and in New York by Mr. Cyril Maude, while other authors of vastly better plays have seen their works go down to failure because of a regrettable miscasting of the leading part. Mr. Maude—in his curtain speech on the opening night of "The Basker" in New York—apologized for the vacuity of the play by saying that—since the outbreak of the present war—there are no longer any baskers in Great Britain. It is strongly to be hoped that Mr. Maude's opinion is in conformance with the facts.

"OBJECT—MATRIMONY"

"Object—Matrimony" was written by Mr. Montague Glass in collaboration with Mr. Jules Eckert Goodman; and, like the previous plays of Mr. Glass, it deals with the manners and the customs of the poorer class of Jewish people who are engaged in the cloak and suit trade. The all-but-immortal Abe Potash is absent from the play, and Mawruss Perlmutter is also missing from the cast of characters; but the people who remain from a well-remembered minor chapter of our human comedy are clearly sketched and their sayings are amusingly recorded in a dialect that is no less comic than of yore.

But something rather dreadful has happened to the present composition. The sympathy, the tenderness, the pathos, which made the previous plays of Mr. Glass so rich in their appeal to the better nature of the public have mysteriously disappeared. "Object—Matrimony" is as funny as the most commercial manager could wish. It evokes loud laughter from the audience, and this laughter is sustained from the outset to the end; but, somehow, this response must be regarded—to borrow an illuminating phrase of George M. Cohan's—as the wrong kind of laughter. The audience laughs at the characters, not with them; and this reaction is unfortunate. It must not be assumed that it was the intention of Mr. Glass and Mr. Goodman, in this play, to attack the Jewish race; and yet the story seems to hold the Jewish people up to ridicule and undeserved contempt.

The hero, Milton Sachs, is in financial difficulties. He owes to Julius Lesengelt more money than he can possibly afford to pay. It happens that Lesengelt is very eager to marry off his daughter, Birdie, who, being extremely fat and absolutely unattractive, has never yet been sought in matrimony. The book-keeper of Milton Sachs, named Clara Fein—a scheming girl who is engaged to marry him—persuades him to promise to marry Birdie Lesengelt in order to secure a temporary remission of his financial obligation to her father. Birdie is delighted at the unexpected fact of having found a suitor. In the last act, we see her dressed up in her wedding-gown and waiting nervously for the arrival of the

There is only one way to really stop perspiration odor!

THE constant dread of noticeable perspiration odor is universal. It shames the person who has it—and annoys those who notice it on others.

This annoyance is caused by certain chemicals in the perspiration of many individuals, which produce an offensive odor in places like the armpits, where the perspiration cannot evaporate instantly as it should.

To try merely to neutralize perspiration odor is only a makeshift. You can never be positive it will be entirely neutralized—you cannot even be sure this method will give you relief even for a few hours.

There is only one way to find complete relief from this annoyance—only one method that will make you feel absolutely safe, and that is to divert the perspiration from the parts like the armpits where even the normal perspiration cannot evaporate.

This is what Odo-ro-no, the perspiration corrective does! Two or three applications a week of this preparation will keep the armpits, etc., pleasantly dry and odorless. Odo-ro-no prevents perspiration odor by making the thing that causes it impossible.

Get Odo-ro-no today and find complete relief from all perspiration annoyance tonight. 50c and $1, trial size 25c. In Canada, 70c and $1.40, trial size 35c. By mail postpaid if your dealer hasn't it.

In the rest of the exhibition, the work of three men demanded attention. George Luks deserved and has obtained praise for his honest and simple version of Jan Matulka, who seems caught in his flight past the frame. It is an interesting, vivid, and somewhat modernist treatment of a figure drawn broadly and in curves, without detail. Yet there is about it something very much alive and persistent in impressing its personality upon one. De Witt M. Lockman's "The Gold Jacket" is brilliant and full of light. In the treatment of the jacket of gold and black brocade with its edges of vermillion, the diaphanous white, scarf and the dull blue cushions, it is handled swiftly and skilfully, even brilliantly. Yet the painting leaves one regretting that so interesting a figure should be set against a dull and unimaginatively treated gray panel, which does not hold with its brilliant color. Lastly, there is the "Portrait of Mrs. Cushing" by Howard Gardiner Cushing. This is one of the most delightful things in the exhibition, poetic, imaginative, full of life and delicate vibration of color, in pale tones of white and gold with touches of Chinese blue and black. It is a portrait, yet the figure is used only as a part of a beautiful whole, and the painting is full of life, yet has the calm quiet of the east.

AN ENGLISH WATER-COLOR PAINTER

An interesting exhibition of water colors, mostly English interiors, by William B. E. Ranken, was held under the direction of Mrs. Albert Sterner, at the Knoedler Galleries early in November. Mr. Ranken is easily at home in this field, and displays ability to draw accurately, even in difficult perspective as in "A Fountain at Trianon," where a curving balustrade throws an almost dancing shadow on the sunlight walk. Among the most interesting of these water colors is "A State Bedroom, Blenheim Palace," which is filled with suggested detail in pattern of porcelains, pictures, and clock,—detail which may be found when hunted for but is so delicately treated as not to obtrude. This work is an interesting study of light falling through a long window and of objects silhouetted against the light. It is all treated broadly with no slurring, but a minute study of detail, subordinated.

The exhibition included interiors lent by Mrs. Cyril Hatch, Mrs. F. C. Havemeyer, Cosmo Gordon-Lennox, Esq., and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney. This exhibition was followed by one of portraits by Ossip Perelman, a Russian who has worked in Paris and whose best work is in his portraits, especially those of men. The early part of December, this gallery will hold a comparative exhibition, including works of Russian, French, and American painters shown side by side.

Two exhibitions combined to fill the Montross Galleries during the first half of November, that of the American Society of Miniature Painters and that of the New York Society of Etchers. An exhibition of one hundred and ninety-four miniatures, comprising portraits and a few figure studies and landscapes, can never be seen to advantage when hung in one room. For the most part, the work followed the conventional and expected in a careful and painstaking art and perhaps lost by comparison with the freer and more imaginative etchings, in the adjoining gallery,—those "change-lings of the artistic world" as Carl Ziegler has called them.

ETCHINGS AND MINIATURES

This exhibition of etchings showed a very great variety in treatment and technique, from the very tight and the very conventional to the modern modernist,—for Arthur B. Davies here tried his hand at etching for the first time, and Walt Kuhn escaped from all etching conventions and even used a plate of irregular shape. John Marin's works have a freedom and breadth that make interesting pattern but he loses that delicate sensitiveness of line which is a beauty of etching, as on his "Brooklyn Bridge," which is more interesting as a design than suggestive of Brooklyn Bridge. In contrast was the "Fairy Land—Palisades Park" by R. Seidenberg, where light and its reflection on the water is played up from a well-worked plate to represent light shining through the dark of night.

Eugene Higgins betrayed a love for the work of Millet in his etchings of figures and landscapes. Ernest D. Roth was characteristically represented in his larger etchings (which depend so much on quality of line for their effect, while they lack somewhat his texture) by Chartres Cathedral as seen above the roofs of the town, by "St. Pierre Beauvais" and "Hill Town, Assisi," with its stepped paths and streets. Earl Horter showed his versatility, his out-of-door atmosphere, and his ability to draw and express textures, in a series of works ranging from "Riverside Viaduct" to his "Naples Quarter." Child Hassam's delightful etching of "Calvary Church in Snow," with its every line and angle softened by the snow that has fallen and clings upon it, was in strong contrast to the definite clear line and brilliancy of his "Fifth Avenue—Noon," while his nude, "The Dressing-Table," differed greatly from both of these.

SEEN on the STAGE

bridegroom. But Milton Sachs is late, because he has been trying desperately at the last moment to raise sufficient money to discharge his debt to Birdie's father. At last he appears upon the scene. He has gathered up the necessary money; and, having done so, he refuses to marry Birdie and announces his decision to marry Clara Fein.

This final act was intended to be funny; but somehow it made the spectator feel like climbing on the stage and taking the part of the unattractive fat girl who, against all dictates of desert, had been despised and rejected by the authors. The loud guffaws evoked by an attitude of mind that is ungentlemanly and unsportsmanlike are unworthy of being welcomed in the theatre.

The only thing that ever occupies the minds of the characters in the present play is money. The authors have emphasized the most sordid characteristic that has been ascribed, through many centuries of comic and unsympathetic comment, to the Jewish race. The peculiar virtues of the Jewish people—their warmth and depth of sentiment, their generous and human humor, their fidelity to family affection—these virtues, which were adequately celebrated in the two preceding plays by Mr. Glass, are scarcely noted in the present piece. "Object—Matrimony" makes the public laugh; but it makes the well-bred people in the audience ashamed of their own laughter. This is not a comfortable feeling; and it damns the authors.

The French widow's chapeau revealing as it does this fascinating fringe of hair, is doubtless responsible for its vogue. It covers frowns and wrinkles, complements the contour of the face and is wonderfully alluring. It is an attractive convenience for the motor hat, and—worn in the boudoir cap,—the Beauty Bang gives a quaint charm and conceals the belated coiffure.

One of the ambulances for the transportation of infantile paralysis cases was given by Mrs. Philip M. Lydig

CHRISTMAS CHARITY

WHEN disease makes its appearance in a household where expert medical advice and proper facilities for combating illness are to be had, the condition of affairs is at best an anxious one. Much more difficult is the position of the abjectly poor, such as the tenement dwellers, who have little knowledge of fighting disease. During the infantile paralysis epidemic the children of the Ghetto suffered beyond the imagination of those who have at their command the services of skilled nurses, masseurs, and qualified physicians. In treating this disease not only great care during illness, but after care, also, is very necessary, and neglect often brings about tragic results.

A "SAVE THE CHILD" MOVEMENT

The protective instinct of a mother in regard to her child can generally be relied upon, but there are cases when the abnormal child is neglected and made to feel his deficiencies. The child crippled as a result of disease is necessarily a drain upon the family fund of time, energy, and resources. In the families of the very poor, where there are many other mouths demanding food, the non-producer is an impediment and must suffer. In many cases, although the crippled child may be cared for, the ignorance of parents is a cause of great harm. For instance a brace must be periodically adjusted, in order that the child may not outgrow it. Often an interval of months elapses between visits to the clinic, and whatever readjustments of the brace may have been necessary as the child's health improved, have not been attended to. Because of this neglect, due to an indifference founded largely on ignorance, many children who otherwise could have recovered, have been incapacitated for life. It is to save the children who have now just passed through the acute stage, that a "Save the Child" movement has now been organized.

At the present time there are agencies in good working order and properly coordinated which will take charge of the child who has been released from the hospital or from quarantine in the home. The child, after its release, can immediately be taken in hand by a district nurse who, after an examination, refers the case to a dispensary or a convalescent home. The physicians, nurses, and hospital wards are all willing to coordinate to take care of these aftermath cases, but the main difficulty lies in bringing the patients and the remedial agencies together. It is with this difficulty in mind that the Transportation Committee is endeavoring to obtain the desired loans or gifts of motor buses or automobiles. It is imperative that the children who have recovered from acute infantile paralysis should be taken daily to the clinic, and, as there are over twelve hundred children who need this care immediately, large numbers of vehicles are in demand. Automobiles have already been donated by Mrs. Philip Lydig and Mrs. Jefferson Seligman.

The popular fear of paralysis has often made it impossible for small patients to be taken in the street cars to the clinics; many children who can not walk are too large to be carried by the mother, and often the clinics are not situated near car lines. Besides, there is danger of discouragement and a resulting neglect of clinical treatment, when obtaining it demands so much of the vitality of the mother.

MEANS TO THE GOOD END

Much of this tragedy can be averted by the establishment of a regular transfer service which will go from house to house and carry children to the clinic, where physicians and nurses and masseurs will give the necessary physical care and exercises. Dr. Joseph Collins, physician to the Neurological Institute, has stated in a public article that there is no occasion for hysteria as to contagion, since there is not one authenticated case of the transmission of the disease through personal contact. The New York Board of Health statistics for the first six thousand seven hundred odd families in which disease appeared, showed that in six thousand five hundred of these families there was only one case of infantile paralysis in each.

The Committee on Transportation has as chairman Miss Sara Graham-Mulhall, vice-chairman John Winters Branne, M.D., and as treasurer Mrs. J. Clifton Edgar. Communications intended for this committee and all donations may be addressed to the Committee on Transportation, care of 289 Fourth Avenue, Rooms 30 and 31. Among those serving on the Committee are Mrs. Philip M. Lydig, Mrs. Percy R. Turnure, Mrs. Willard D. Straight, Mrs. Charles D. Dickey, Mrs. Paul Morton, Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, Mrs. Francis McNeil Bacon, Mrs. Lindley H. Chapin, Mrs. George Riggs (Kate Wiggin) Right Reverend Bishop Greer, Dean Grosvenor, Rabbi Wise, and Mrs. James Speyer, Reverend Howard C. Robbins, Mrs. Jonathan Thorn, and Mrs. Egerton Winthrop.
